From the foreword As our nation and our Navy shift their focus away from the land wars in Iraq and Afghanistan that have so dominated our internal conversations for more than a decade and pivot toward the Asia Pacific region it is most appropriate that this study You Cannot Surge Trust should make its appearance The assembled authors under the assured editorial hand of Sandra Doyle bring forward a series of episodes that demonstrate the evolving and increasingly important nature of maritime coalition operations around the world Beginning with a look at maritime interception operations in the Arabian Gulf during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm this work moves forward through the post Cold War era to include recent operations in the Middle East and central Asia Written from a multinational point of view the analysis suggests that nations even superpowers are increasingly dependent upon each other for support during major combat operations and that only by frequent consultation exercises cooperation in technology development and understanding of force structure capabilities will future maritime coalitions be successful This study also advances a larger argument regarding the relevance of naval and maritime history in defense policy development The challenges faced by coalition forces during the 1991 to 2005 period are not so different from what confronted those who sailed before The crews of Continental Navy ships during the American Revolution had difficulty keeping up with French ships owing to differences in the size of the respective fleets and individual ship design During World Wars I and II the U S and Royal navies consistently had to overcome problems inherent in differences in classification and communications Lastly in the increasingly geopolitical complexities of modern warfare illustrated by our experiences operating alongside allies in Korea and Vietnam history reveals that the different rules of engagement under which nations exercise their forces can cause conflicts within a partnership even as the partners prosecute a conflict Each of these issues has been raised before each is examined within You Cannot Surge Trust and each will raise its head again in some future hostility Seapower in the Nuclear Age Joel J. Sokolsky,2021-01-26 This book first published in 1991 provides a major analysis of the prelude to the US s Cold War maritime strategy showing how NATO s maritime forces were organised in the period It examines how the United States Navy and allied navies particularly the Royal Navy were incorporated into the Alliance s nuclear and conventional deterrent forces It looks at the structure of the main naval commands the growth of Soviet maritime forces and the impact of the flexible response strategy on NATO s naval posture in the 1970s Drawing upon many declassified documents this account fills an important gap in postwar literature on American seapower and its relation to European security It also addresses important aspects of NATO strategy and organisation Russian Naval Modernization and Strategy - Newest Ships and

Submarines Fielding Significant Offensive Capability, Black Sea Fleet Improvements Focused on NATO as Adversary, Future of Russian Navy U S Military, Department of Defense (DoD), Jonathan Evitts, 2019-06-11

Russia's maritime development focuses on support of land forces and protection of its coastal territory. Its naval strategy has not changed greatly from the Soviet era. The fleet is greatly reduced in size and will likely continue to decrease as older ships decommission. The fleet's newest ships and submarines field significant offensive capability on relatively small platforms. Russia's poor economic situation and corruption throughout the Ministry of Defense and shipbuilding industry will hinder the construction and maintenance of ships. A reduced military budget will further inhibit maritime development. The Northern and Pacific Fleets continue to be home to Russia's strategic forces. The Black Sea Fleet is receiving the greatest improvements as Russia seeks to increase its presence in the Mediterranean Sea and the Middle East. Moscow considers NATO its primary adversary and will likely focus its reduced budget on improving its land and air forces instead of continuing large scale naval development. This thesis uses analysis of Russian policy documents and Moscow's corresponding actions, fleet composition of the Russian Federation Navy and the economic status of Russia to provide insight into Russian naval strategy and outlook. This compilation includes a reproduction of the 2019 Worldwide Threat Assessment of the U S Intelligence Community. Western states and Russia are often antagonistic toward each other. Russia at the eastern edge of Europe frequently has adopted a posture of defensive expansionism in that it seeks to create a buffer zone between itself and perceived aggressor states. During the Soviet period the buffer zone was the Soviet Republics surrounding Russia's borders. Following the collapse of the Soviet Union it remains primarily the former Soviet Republics. Moscow sees the West as both a model to follow on a path to modernity and the aggressor against Russian power. Russia oscillates between those concepts and its policies regarding the West are inconsistent particularly since the collapse of the Soviet Union. At the beginning of Russia's modern history at its weakest point Russia attempted to become democratic which might have led to modernization of its society and economy. That however did not happen. Instead Russia reverted to a quasi democracy becoming far more assertive and outspoken against Western unilateral actions as Russia's economy strengthened under Putin. Russia's navy has not since the end of the Soviet Union been a significant factor in global politics or on the world's oceans. Russia's naval fleet sat in disrepair for decades. Keels laid for construction sat unfinished due to lack of funds or initiative to finish the ships. Surface ships and submarines sat pier side with limited funding and crews to sail them for strategic or training purposes. That is slowly changing. Moscow instituted new maritime policy began and completed not only new construction but new ship designs with updated technology improved its ballistic missile submarine capability and added new aircraft to the naval aviation fleet. Why has Moscow decided to upgrade the fleet after years of disrepair and neglect and what is the intent for its resurgent navy?
