

I stepped outside with father's boots on, feeling the heaviness of his feet in mine.

The people in my country's soil then clawed into his boots and pulled me down until I could no longer breathe in anything but dense thick soil and the earthworm particles traveling into my mouth.

The spirits of my land traveled through me as well. They drifted in and out of my body, trading places and laughing, laughing at me and my sad predicament.
