Nation States And The Multinational Corporation A Political Economy Of Foreign Direct Investment:

Nation-states and the Multinational Corporation Nathan Michael Jensen, 2006 Attracting the investment of multinational corporations foreign direct investment has become a central economic development strategy of developed and developing countries Jensen explores how government policies and political institutions affect patterns of FDI by utilising quantitative FDI data U S Power Multinational Corp Robert Gilpin, 1975-11-13 Monograph on foreign policies and economic policies of the USA with regard to foreign investment economic relations and multinational enterprises role of USA shows the reciprocal interaction of economics and politics in today's world References and statistical tables

Nation-States and the Multinational Corporation Nathan M. Jensen, 2008-01-21 What makes a country attractive to foreign investors To what extent do conditions of governance and politics matter This book provides the most systematic exploration to date of these crucial questions at the nexus of politics and economics Using quantitative data and interviews with investment promotion agencies investment location consultants political risk insurers and decision makers at multinational corporations Nathan Jensen arrives at a surprising conclusion Countries may be competing for international capital but government fiscal policy both taxation and spending has little impact on multinationals investment decisions Although government policy has a limited ability to determine patterns of foreign direct investment FDI inflows political institutions are central to explaining why some countries are more successful in attracting international capital First democratic institutions lower political risks for multinational corporations Indeed they lead to massive amounts of foreign direct investment Second politically federal institutions in contrast to fiscally federal institutions lower political risks for multinationals and allow host countries to attract higher levels of FDI inflows Third the International Monetary Fund often cited as a catalyst for promoting foreign investment actually deters multinationals from investment in countries under IMF programs Even after controlling for the factors that lead countries to seek IMF support IMF agreements are associated with much lower levels of FDI inflows The Political Economy of Investment Arbitration Zoe Phillips Williams, 2022-08-11 The Political Economy of Investment Arbitration asks how political institutions and actors in the host state of an investment contribute to the emergence of investor state disputes Combining insights from international relations and political economy it considers two opposing explanations for investor state disputes shifting state preferences toward FDI or the lack of state capacity to maintain an investment friendly environment This book's overarching conclusion is that democratic institutions in host states contribute to the emergence of investor state disputes Phillips Williams argues that at the heart of many investor state disputes are highly politicized distributional conflicts involving a range of domestic interest groups Indeed it is often pressure from these groups whether through voting protests or lobbying which motivates states to take the policy decisions that are subsequently subject to investors legal challenges Thus this monograph demonstrates that in the face of the potentially high costs posed by investment arbitration governments continue to take measures which may harm investors in order to pursue specific policy goals More importantly these disputes are not only the result of corruption or weak rule of law but of measures which are taken at the behest of broader interest groups and relate to clear public policy concerns This has important implications of our normative assessment of the regime and is highly relevant to current debates in both international law and international political economy about the relationship between investment treaties and domestic politics

Partisan Investment in the Global Economy Pablo M. Pinto, 2013-03-29 Pinto develops a partisan theory of foreign direct investment FDI arguing that left wing governments choose policies that allow easier entry by foreign investors more than right wing governments and that foreign investors prefer to invest in countries governed by the left To reach this determination the book derives the conditions under which investment flows should be expected to affect the relative demand for the services supplied by economic actors in host countries Based on these expected distributive consequences a political economy model of the regulation of FDI and changes in investment performance within countries and over time is developed The theory is tested using both cross national statistical analysis and two case studies exploring the development of the foreign investment regimes and their performance over the past century in Argentina and South Korea
