Natural Disasters and Sustainable Development Riccardo Casale, Claudio Margottini, 2013-06-29 Natural disasters are a clear example of people living in conflict with the environment Disasters cause human social and environmental losses and sometimes even threaten geopolitical stability as in many less developed countries They are also a problem of global concern even when damage is local the mechanisms are often dependent on global meteorological climatic circulation Losses frequently affect several countries as could be seen in the floods in central Europe in 2002 It is obvious that there is a clear need for a new approach capable of incorporating the prevention of natural disasters whilst mitigating strategies within the cycle of sustainable development There are no thematic disciplines or political boundaries limiting initiatives the integration of data providers data users information providers and information users in a global and holistic manner is the desired outcome of the new frontier This book falls into this new category multidisciplinary interventions and socio economic point of views are the basic inputs for a changing science implementing sustainable development for the benefit of citizens and society It is comprised of studies and investigations which explain natural processes and modelling as well as assessing hazards and risks and is rounded off with suggestions for sustainable development Thus reflecting the best results of research on this topic funded by the European Commission

Disaster Prevention for Sustainable Development Mohan Munasinghe, Caroline L. Clarke, 1995 Natural Disasters.

Globalization and Risk Reduction Giuseppe Manzillo, 2011-02-14 Disaster Risk Management DRM has recently become a significant concern for development cooperation among international and non governmental organizations NGOs involved in development programs Natural disasters have devastated an increasing number of regions especially those in the developing phase destroyed national and international investments and set back progress gained with development Developing countries are not able to reduce the impact of large scale catastrophes because they lack building codes land registration processes regulatory mechanisms and development itself Also they tend to prioritize other development projects and underestimate the risks presented by natural events Finally the quality of construction is very low in these countries and the effects of natural phenomena are therefore catastrophic The United Nations initiative for an International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction 1990 99 has placed this concern at the top of the international agenda International and national actors UN agencies the World Bank NGOs and donor countries involved in the development of poor countries are now more concerned about prevention in their development programs DRM is considered an effective tool for protecting development projects yet it is infrequently considered by developing countries in their programs even in highly vulnerable countries As such developing countries are not able to effectively integrate a strategic approach to DRM into their national policy on their own causing the poorest communities to suffer the most as a result The improvement of living conditions and the promotion of a sustainable development are the core objectives of the organizations involved in the development of poor countries They intend to pursue those goals by including natural risk reduction and mitigation programs in their projects for development can be sustainable only by preventing or at least minimizing the effects of natural disasters In order to do so they have set up programs and mechanisms aimed at supporting developing countries local institutions to develop their DRM capacity and include it in their national policy Natural disasters are not a challenge to developing countries only they are also a challenge for development cooperation Strategies have been developed and implemented to reduce the vulnerability of populations in poor countries and to decrease disaster risk Developing countries should strengthen their capability to manage natural disasters by allocating more resources to Disaster Risk Reduction DRR programs and by cooperating with developed nations to reduce their higher vulnerability to natural hazards
