

Life in the RAINFOREST

The world's rainforests are perfectly-balanced ecosystems, home to half of all the world's species. They provide everything that the plants, animals and indigenous people living in them need to thrive. Many species rely on each other for survival, so if some plants are destroyed, or an animal becomes extinct, it can have a devastating effect on the rest of the forest. Take a trip deep into this African rainforest for a closer look.

Watering the WORLD

Rainforests cover all the giant water pumps. The big drops of rain on their leaves drive up water - and the trees' leaves release it back into the air as rain. Raining clouds. That's why it can be so hard to get rain in the desert. Thanks for the shower!

Busy BEES

Bees are one of the most important insects in the rainforest. As they buzz about collecting nectar, they pass pollen to the plants which allows plants to reproduce. From flower to flower, spreading seeds to grow. Rainforest bees are busy - it's why most of the people living in the rainforest have bees.

TRUNKS in the trees

Elephants only spend about 10% of their time on the ground and most of the rest of their time in the trees. As the elephants' trunk is so long, it can reach up to the top of the trees to grab fruit and leaves. Amazingly, when an elephant is in the trees, it can't get to the ground.

Gardeners of the FOREST

Gorillas spend their time eating leaves, fruits, seeds and shoots. By spreading seeds, gorillas play a key role in maintaining the African rainforests and, hence, the world's climate. When you plant a tree in your garden, you're helping to keep the world's climate cool. When you plant a tree in the forest, you're helping to keep the world's climate cool. When you plant a tree in the forest, you're helping to keep the world's climate cool.

Hidden FRUITS

There are lots of amazing fruits in the rainforest - if you know where to look. Using their long and strong, the indigenous forest people depend on the forest for food and medicine. So, if you know where to look, you'll find a lot of amazing fruits in the rainforest.

Tiny TROOPERS

Bees, ants, termites and beetles may be small, but they're some of the most important insects in the rainforest. They're busy all day - eating the food and building the homes that the forest needs. Without them, the forest would be a very different place.

Forest FRIENDS

Rainforest birds, like the African grey parrot, feed their young in the trees. As they grow, some birds fall to the ground and - in time - grow into new plants and trees that without the forest, these beautiful birds have no food or protection - and that's a sad thing for nature.

Tropical TREASURES

For centuries, the rainforest has been a treasure trove of everything - from spices and medicines to food and shelter. Today, it's a treasure trove of life. From the forest, we have learned how to build houses, medicines, food, and even clothing from the forest and its treasures.
