Emotions and Feelings Stephen Gislason, Dr Gislason investigates the for me ness of experiences using neuroscience and philosophy Everyone has some idea what emotions and feelings are but their exact nature is elusive We can begin by noting that emotions and feelings are not the same The first issues to be discussed are semantic not trivial by any means There are many words that refer to emotions and feelings There is no standard use of terms We recognize that brains bring information about the outside world together with information from inside the body Images of the outside tend to be detailed and explicit in consciousness Monitor images from inside the body tend to be vague and variable Generally humans are ignorant of internal processes and invent all manner of imaginary and irrelevant explanations to explain feelings The term emotion is best used to point to animal and human behavior There are a small number of primary emotions and variations that involve mixtures of emotional displays with other behaviors Joy anger fear and pain are pure emotions Other more complex and derivative experiences act as interfaces to emotions Love jealousy and hate are not emotions These are descriptions of complex interactions and evaluations that involve a range of feelings and interface to true emotions some of the time For example lovers experience a range of feelings and display different emotions at different times Euphoria is the benefit of being in love Sadness and anger are the cost of being in love

Jealousy like love is another complex of cognitions feelings and emotions that exist to monitor and regulate close relationships The absence of emotional display is highly valued in polite society Humans have advanced toward civil and productive social environments that are emotionally neutral Emotional neutrality is a requirement for acceptable behavior in school and work environments Harlequin Love Inspired March 2019 - Box Set 2 of 2 Marie E.
