Complex Kisses Kimberly Quinn, 2016 I promised myself to never come back Yet here I was stuck in the hometown I'd run away from sick with worry and faced with the temptation of the most handsome stranger I'd ever met Fate had either the very best or very worst timing Still I tried not to question it How could I when it put Eric Anderson in my path He was like my knight in shining armour Trustworthy steadfast and sexy as hell When he found me crying in a hospital stairwell he'd been more than willing to save the day But the only rescuing I needed was from myself As a single mom with a bad habit of running from my troubles and an even worse habit of lying about it I was a mess And Eric was already carrying a heavy burden on his broad shoulders The absolute last thing he needed was me He got me anyway Oh how he got me Any and every which way he wanted When our undeniable chemistry finally boiled over we called it a temporary distraction A momentary reprieve An agreement to escape from the ugly truths of our lives and to just live in the moment Somehow what was meant as a distraction turned into something more Something real Now I had a choice to make Follow my instincts and run from the things of my past Or leave fear behind for good and find a new future with Eric One thing would hurt me But the other Well the other might just break me
