

QUESTION:

A 12-year-old student named Mark is referred to you for a comprehensive speech-language evaluation due to concerns about his fluency. He has a family history of stuttering, and his parents have observed moments of disfluency since he was four years old. Mark has been experiencing a recent increase in the frequency and severity of stuttering episodes, which have been negatively impacting his academic performance and social interactions. As a school-based speech-language pathologist, you are tasked with developing an appropriate assessment plan to evaluate Mark's fluency.

Which of the following components would be most important to include in your assessment plan to obtain a comprehensive understanding of Mark's fluency disorder?

A) A standardized fluency assessment, parent and teacher interviews, speech samples in various contexts, and a language and articulation screening.

B) A standardized fluency assessment, a comprehensive language assessment, and a hearing screening.

C) Parent and teacher interviews, a comprehensive language assessment, and an assessment of Mark's reading abilities.

D) A standardized fluency assessment, a comprehensive language assessment, and a written report from Mark's previous speech therapist.

Tip #2:

The answer options cue us in that this is likely going to be related to a stuttering evaluation. Start thinking about what may be included in an assessment related to fluency.

Tip #1:

This is a long question. Consider reading the answers first!

Tip #3:

Key terms in the question are bolded. There are concerns related to stuttering, there is a family history, he has had moments of disfluencies since he was younger, and no other areas of concern have been brought up.

Tip #4:

Key terms in the answers are bolded and analysis of the options are below.

Analysis of option A:

This includes formal and informal assessment measures as well as observations of other skills. Pretty good - but let's keep reading!

Analysis of option B:

This includes formal assessments but no informal assessments. Hmm...

Analysis of option C:

This includes formal and informal assessment measures but doesn't look at fluency specifically. Hmm...

Analysis of option D:

This includes formal assessment measures but wait...there's nothing in the question that says he has had speech therapy before. This one is out!

Result:

Going through each answer option yielded some good information. Only one answer was entirely comprehensive AND had all true information from the question. We can feel good choosing option A!
