Race And Juvenile Justice:

Race and Ethnicity in the Juvenile Justice System Tina L. Freiburger, Kareem L. Jordan, 2016-12-01 Race and Ethnicity in the Juvenile Justice System provides a comprehensive empirical examination of the role of race and ethnicity in the juvenile court. Using empirical research as a foundation, the authors examine how race and ethnicity influence multiple decision points for youth entering the juvenile system, including arrest, referral, petition, pre-adjudication, release, adjudication, and disposition. The authors ground the decision making in a separate chapter that exclusively focuses on theories that can be used to explain the role of race and ethnicity in juvenile justice processing. Additionally, there is an examination of how community factors differentially impact decision making based on the race/ethnicity of youth, the role of race/ethnicity in the practice of transferring youth to adult court, and how race influences juveniles' perceptions of police and the juvenile system. Also, the authors empirically examine the role of race/ethnicity on the processing of status offenders and how it influences female involvement in delinquency. In framing all of these salient issues in the proper context, the authors provide a historical analysis on the role of race in development of the juvenile court system and how different races were treated both before and after the juvenile court's implementation. The underlying theme of the text is that all races/ethnicities of youth were not initially served by or meant to benefit from the juvenile court. Therefore, the continuing racial and ethnic disparities currently observed in the system can be traced to the pre-juvenile court era. Our Children, Their Children Darnell F.

Hawkins, Kimberly Kempf-Leonard, 2010-02-15 In Our Children, Their Children, a prominent team of researchers argues that a second-rate and increasingly punitive juvenile justice system is allowed to persist because most people believe it is designed for children in other ethnic and socioeconomic groups. While public opinion, laws, and social policies that convey distinctions between our children and their children may seem to conflict with the American ideal of blind justice, they are hardly at odds with patterns of group differentiation and inequality that have characterized much of American history. Our Children, Their Children provides a state-of-the-science examination of racial and ethnic disparities in the American juvenile justice system. Here, contributors document the precise magnitude of these disparities, seek to determine their causes, and propose potential solutions. In addition to race and ethnicity, contributors also look at the effects on juvenile justice of suburban sprawl, the impact of family and neighborhood bias in postarrest decisions, and mental health issues. Assessing the implications of these differences for public policy initiatives and legal reforms, this volume is the first critical summary of what is known and unknown in this important area of social research. Race and Ethnicity in the Juvenile and Criminal Justice Systems

Disproportionate Minority Contact and Racism in the US Paul R. Ketchum, B. Mitchell Peck, 2023-06-13 Drawing on original data this book addresses the issue of color blind racism through an examination of the circular logic used by the juvenile justice system to criminalize non White youth

Where are All the White Kids? Paul Robert Ketchum, 2008 Statistics consistently show that minorities are overrepresented at each level of the juvenile justice system However while Disproportionate Minority Contact DMC in the juvenile justice system is well documented the cause is still unclear Some have suggested that DMC is simply the result of disproportionate amounts of crime committed by minority youth while others claim that racism be it overt subtle individual or institutional plays a significant role in DMC Observation of juvenile court proceedings and interviews with juvenile court judges and lawyers each coded for content analysis were used to determine the effects of race in juvenile court decision making In this research I suggest that race plays a significant yet subtle role as personal beliefs political necessities and motives of both professional participants in the system and political and community civic leaders result in racial stratification established within a racialized social framework
