

*Lizzie Borden took an axe
and gave her mother forty whacks
and when she saw what she had done,
she gave her father forty-one.*

Suffragit it would have been, however, not to entice Miss Lizzie. She was, for one thing, our nearest neighbor. She rented the white clapboard cottage next to ours, and every morning from the parlor I would watch her bustle down the steps and across the small sandy yard, tufted with weed, to the gate of the picket fence. She would unlatch the gate, slip through it, then turn and latch it once more, carefully, deliberately, like someone who took care against intruders. . . . She moved with her shoulders hunched and bent slightly forward, leaning into a private wind, and she wore her black, I thought, almost proudly, as though it were a uniform, as though she were on march.

For another thing, of course, she was notorious. I doubt there was a single child in all New England, in all the country, who had not heard the famous bit of gossip about her and the axe. I remember my disbelief, and my worst thrills of excitement, when Father revealed to me that, yes, the woman next door was indeed that Lizzie, the woman who had been tried, almost thirty years before, for the awful murder of her parents. And had been found, he added gravely, pointedly, not guilty.

"A fine read. Continuously, and awfully, horrifying throughout. Easy to pick up, very hard to put down."

telling Elizabeth Smith's fascinating life story and retracing her posthumous transatlantic fame McMahon reveals a larger narrative about women's efforts to enact learned and fulfilling lives and the cultural reactions such aspirations inspired in the early nineteenth century. Although Smith was cast as exceptional by her contemporaries and modern scholars alike McMahon argues that her scholarly achievements, travel explorations and posthumous fame were all emblematic of the age in which she lived. Offering insights into Romanticism, picturesque tourism, celebrity culture and women's literary productions McMahon asks the provocative question: How many seemingly exceptional women must we uncover in the historical record before we are no longer surprised?
