Within the category of small satellites CubeSats have emerged as a space platform defined in terms of 10 cm x 10 cm x 10 cm sized cubic units of approximately 1.3 kg each called U.S. Historically CubeSats were developed as training projects to expose students to the challenges of real world engineering practices and system design. Yet their use has rapidly spread within academia, industry and government agencies both nationally and internationally. In particular CubeSats have caught the attention of parts of the U.S. space science community which sees this platform despite its inherent constraints as a way to affordably access space and perform unique measurements of scientific value. The first science results from such CubeSats have only recently become available; however, questions remain regarding the scientific potential and technological promise of CubeSats in the future. Achieving Science with CubeSats reviews the current state of the scientific potential and technological promise of CubeSats. This report focuses on the platform's promise to obtain high priority science data as defined in recent decadal surveys in astronomy and astrophysics, Earth science and applications from space, planetary science and solar and space physics, heliophysics, the science priorities identified in the 2014 NASA Science Plan and the potential for CubeSats to advance biology and microgravity research. It provides a list of sample science goals for CubeSats, many of which address targeted science often in coordination with other spacecraft or use sacrificial or high risk orbits that lead to the demise of the satellite after critical data have been collected. Other goals relate to the use of CubeSats as constellations or swarms, deploying tens to hundreds of CubeSats that function as one distributed array of measurements.
