Sarcoidosis is a type of inflammation that occurs in various locations of the body for no known reason Normally when foreign substances or organisms enter the body the immune system will fight back by activating an immune response Inflammation is a normal part of this immune response but it should subside once the foreign antigen is gone In sarcoidosis the inflammation persists and some of the immune cells form abnormal clumps of tissue called granulomas The disease can affect any organ in the body but it is most likely to occur in the lungs It can also affect the skin eyes liver or lymph nodes Although the cause of sarcoidosis is not known research suggests that it may be due to an extreme immune response or extreme sensitivity to certain substances It also seems to have a genetic component as well and tends to run in families Sarcoidosis most commonly develops in people between 20 and 50 years of age African Americans are somewhat more likely to develop sarcoidosis than Caucasians and females are somewhat more likely to develop sarcoidosis than males The symptoms of sarcoidosis depend on the organ involved This book deals with the diagnosis and treatment of this mysterious disease of unknown etiology

Clinical Manifestations, Pathophysiology, Diagnostic Methods, Imaging and Intervention in Sarcoidosis Ali Nawaz Khan,2016-12-01 Sarcoidosis is a multisystem granulomatous disease of unknown etiology that is characterised by noncaseous epithelioid cell granulomas which may affect almost any organ in the body Intrathoracic involvement is common and accounts for most of the morbidity and mortality associated with this disease The diagnosis is based on the total exclusion of other granulomatous disorders The organs that are commonly involved are the lymph nodes lungs liver spleen skin and eyes these organs can be involved individually or in combination The correlation of the clinical radiological features along with the pathologic finding of non caseating epithelioid cell granulomas is vital to establish the diagnosis There is no single precise cause attributed to the causation of this disease Genetic factors are suspected due to the observation that racial groups such as African Americans West Indians and Asians have a higher prevalence of sarcoidosis Familial sarcoidosis is well known which may be attributed to genetic factors or the sharing of a similar environment Environmental factors may also play a role by involving the uptake and processing of unknown antigens by the respiratory system Occasional patients with sarcoidosis have an association with primary biliary cirrhosis where the granulomas in both diseases look similar Patients receiving treatment with anti retroviral therapy or interferon alpha might have pulmonary granulomas as in HIV infected patients and leukemia patients retrospectively Sarcoidosis is more prevalent and is a more severe disease in blacks in the United States of America Two thirds of patients with sarcoidosis resolve spontaneously without specific treatment Therapeutic measures when required rely on immune suppression As the symptoms are varied in sarcoidosis the differential diagnosis includes most non specific systemic disorders A chest radiograph CXR is usually the first diagnostic imaging study in patients with respiratory symptoms A CXR is a non invasive modality widely available easy to interpret and when correlated with the clinical findings may be the only imaging required to diagnose pulmonary sarcoidosis A CXR is also the most commonly used imaging technique for follow up in patients with established diagnosis and is reproducible and cost efficient Conventional chest radiography however has its limitations While it may be normal in 5 10% of patients with established sarcoidosis in 25 30% of patients the radiologic changes are nonspecific or atypical reducing the plain film sensitivity In such cases High Resolution CT HRCT is useful in clarifying the diagnosis providing crucial information on the extent of the disease Furthermore HRCT unlike a plain radiograph can readily differentiate active inflammation from irreversible fibrosis
