armed conflict lack of resources and so on in South Asia and its immediate neighbourhood have not declined but in fact have been increasing and the security threats posed by the refugees and internally displaced persons IDPs is set to increase given the lack of resources and poor governance prevalent in the region Yet none of the countries in South Asia have signed any major convention or treaty at the international level in regard to refugees nor have they any national legislation or regional framework to deal with these issues A comprehensive study focusing on the various dimensions of displacement in South Asia including refugees migrants stateless persons and Internally Displaced Persons IDPs was felt imperative by the Institute of Peace and Conflict Studies Acknowledging non traditional sources of insecurity as being the cornerstone of human insecurity the IPCS had commenced to focus on a range of non military threats to security including Drug Trafficking Terrorism Refugees Organised Crime Governance and Environmental Issues The current volume with specific focus on migration and displacement is a small step in that direction Published in association with Institute of Peace and Conflict Studies
