

DETONATION

How electronics helps tell a knock from a boost...

The MIT-Sperry Detonation Indicator is an engine instrument that discriminates between normal and abnormal combustion.

Through an electronic pickup, it instantly detects detonation—popularly called knocking or pinging—in most types of internal-combustion engines. And it gives immediate indication of detonation.

As a result, operating is given at the time trouble starts... engine life is lengthened... mistakes may be avoided... and the period between engine overhauls is prolonged.

No plugging of engine cylinders is required. Yet even the slightest detonation is signalled visually, and the faulty cylinder or cylinders spotted.

User of the MIT-Sperry Detonation Indicator on engines reaps the remarkable fuel savings, longer engine life, greater safety.

The unit is one of modern transportation which employs internal combustion engines.

Engine manufacturers find this instrument an invaluable aid in designing and testing. It also permits development of fuels properly fitted to engine characteristics, thus increasing power output and lowering fuel costs. Also with the Knockometer, a special application of the Detonation Indicator, fuels with superior anti-knock characteristics can be developed and their quality production controlled.

Since 1917, Sperry engineers have been working on the perfection of a detonation indicator. This is the one of the many fields in which Sperry has pioneered in the field of electronic development.
