

The diagram illustrates the internal components of a washing machine. It shows a cylindrical drum with a central agitator. Water is being poured into the drum from a top inlet. The water level is indicated by a dashed line. The drum is shown in a cross-section view, revealing the internal structure and the position of the agitator.

The diagram illustrates the human immune system's response to a pathogen. A virus (pathogen) is shown entering the body. It is first encountered by a macrophage, which ingests it. The macrophage then presents the pathogen to a T cell, which is activated and begins to produce antibodies. The antibodies are shown binding to the virus, neutralizing it. The diagram also shows the T cell interacting with the macrophage, further activating it. The overall process is labeled 'Human Immune System'.
