Global warming, be it blamed on man's unwise burning of fossil fuels or on natural increases of temperatures during the present interglacial (Holocene), is accompanied by loss of precious farming land due to aridification. Desertification is the topic of the day, and it is more than the buzz of this word which should worry us. Desertification is a synonym for degradation of land taking various faces and is becoming a major headache, difficult to deny and still more difficult to cure.

The frontispiece of the book by Timm Hoffman and Ally Ashwell entitled 'Nature Divided: Land Degradation in South Africa' almost says it all: the fence-line effect (so well known to veld managers) carries a symbolic message of important divisions (be it frontiers or demarcation lines) imposed on nature — and on our minds. It is the political, social and ecological background of the 'culture of divide' which forms the major backdrop of the main theme of this book — degradation of land in South Africa.

South Africa is a signatory of the United Nations Convention to Combat Desertification (1994) and as such is legally obliged to formulate and implement a National Action Programme to combat desertification. The Department of Environmental Affairs and Tourism, therefore, has contracted a technical report to tackle the Programme, which culminated in the publication of this book.

The book is structured in 13 Chapters spanning introductory chapters setting the scene (Chapters 1–3), those tackling issues of land degradation itself (Chapters 4–11), and those contemplating the way forward (Chapters 12–13).

It is a very concise and user-friendly text including many useful statistics on all kinds of issues related to land (and veld, soil, water) degradation. One profits from overviews of definitions of various concepts of ecology, veld management and land degradation — all of these concepts are understood in so many different ways and carry different messages when articulated by laymen, ecologists and politicians! The facts summarised in this book are often eye opening, terrifying, and at least very educative. Did you, for instance, realise that more than 70% of Africa's food is grown by women? Or can you perhaps imagine the effects the HIV/AIDS pandemic may have (and would have) on land degradation or on agricultural production in South Africa as a whole? A terrifying thought, isn't it?

For those who were not very attentive at school or otherwise, and may have got a rather disturbed view of the history of their own country, this is a book to buy and read! Putting such an important issue such as land (veld) degradation into political and social context is its major virtue.

The 'Nature Divided' is a must for anybody interested in the past, present and future of our country. An interested layman, concerned farmer, caring (or less caring) politician, and academics alike can read it with ease. If you teach ecology at any level — this is an ultimate source of data and inspiration. You can learn still more if you go to <http://www.nbi.ac/landdeg> and consult the complete technical report this book is based upon.

By the way, about technical reports and their publication: not many research reports find their way into a book publication available to everybody. Such reports usually end up on dusty shelves joining the 'grey literature' stocks. This book is an example how to do it differently. The University of Cape Town, the National Botanical Institute and last, but not least, both Timm Hoffman and Ally Ashwell should be congratulated on this contribution. For R75 it is a bargain.

Nature Divided Land Degradation In South Africa:

Nature Divided Timm Hoffman, Ally Ashwell, 2001 In the same way that South Africa's people were divided along racial lines so too was its landscape into the predominantly communally farmed lands of the homelands and self governing territories and commercial farming areas These divisions reflected both in former government policy and local practice have profoundly affected land degradation in South Africa This book the product of extensive research is based on a landmark report on land degradation arising from South Africa's commitment to the UN Convention to Combat Desertification It reflects the first complete assessment of South Africa's land degradation problem taking into account not only agricultural and ecological concerns but also the socio political and historical contexts It places previously unavailable information in the hands of those who need it most politicians agricultural extension officers and communal and commercial farmers It will also be of interest to students and teachers At once sobering challenging and optimistic this book is a call to action It shows that we are all affected by the extent of land degradation in South Africa

The Politics of Nature and Science in Southern Africa Maano Ramutsindela, Giorgio Miescher, Melanie Boehi, 2016-09-12 This book brings together recent and ongoing empirical studies to examine two relational kinds of politics namely the politics of nature i.e. how nature conservation projects are sites on which power relations play out and the politics of the scientific study of nature These are discussed in their historical and present contexts and at specific sites on which particular human environment relations are forged or contested This spatio temporal juxtaposition is lacking in current research on political ecology while the politics of science appears marginal to critical scholarship on social nature Specifically the book examines power relations in nature related activities demonstrates conditions under which nature and science are politicised and also accounts for political interests and struggles over nature in its various forms The ecological socio political and economic dimensions of nature cannot be ignored when dealing with present day environmental issues Nature conservation regulations are concerned with the management of flora and fauna as much as with humans Various chapters in the book pay attention to the ways in which nature science and politics are interrelated and also co constitutive of each other They highlight that power relations are naturalised through science and science related institutions and projects such as museums botanical gardens wetlands parks and nature reserves

Land Degradation and Desertification: Assessment, Mitigation and Remediation Pandi Zdruli, Marcello Pagliai, Selim Kapur, Angel Faz Cano, 2010-07-20 Land Degradation and Desertification Assessment Mitigation and Remediation reports research results in sustainable land management and land degradation status and mitigation in 36 countries around the world It includes background papers with continental and international perspectives dealing with land degradation and desertification studies The book assembles various topics of interest for a large audience They include carbon sequestration and stocks modern techniques to trace the trends of land degradation traditional and modern approaches of resource base conservation soil fertility management reforestation rangeland rehabilitation land use planning

GIS techniques in desertification risk cartography participatory ecosystem management policy analyses and possible plans for action Various climatic domains in Africa Asia Europe and The Americas are covered The book will be of interest to a variety of environmental scientists agronomists national and international policy makers and a number of organizations dealing with sustainable management of natural resources Southern African Landscapes and Environmental

Geomorphological Hazards and Disaster Prevention Irasema

Alcántara-Ayala, Andrew S. Goudie, 2010-03-04 Human activities have had a huge impact on the environment and landscape through industrialisation and land use change leading to climate change deforestation desertification land degradation and air and water pollution These impacts are strongly linked to the occurrence of geomorphological hazards such as floods landslides snow avalanches soil erosion and others Geomorphological work includes not only the understanding but the mapping and modelling of Earth s surface processes many of which directly affect human societies In addition geomorphologists are becoming increasingly involved with the dimensions of societal problem solving through vulnerability analysis hazard and risk assessment and management The work of geomorphologists is therefore of prime importance for disaster prevention An international team of geomorphologists have contributed their expertise to this volume making this a scientifically rigorous work for a wide audience of geomorphologists and other Earth scientists including those involved in environmental science hazard and risk assessment management and policy

The Green Economy in the Global South

Stefano Ponte, Daniel Brockington, 2018-10-11 The idea and practice of the green economy is gaining momentum coinciding with financial instability and continued economic woe in the Global North but generally more positive economic circumstances in the Global South Green economic initiatives in the Global South are multiplying and include carbon payments ecotourism community based wildlife management sustainability certification initiatives and offsets by mining companies exploiting new resources These initiatives are reallocating resources redefining inequalities and redistributing the fortune and misfortune of participants of the green economy and those excluded from it They have also led to resistance locally nationally and transnationally and to demands for alternatives to market driven instruments and solutions which are generally gaining strength and coherence The articles included in this volume bring together a multi disciplinary team of scholars from North and South to provide nuanced analyses of green economy experiences in the Global South analysing the opportunities they provide but also the redistributions they entail and the kinds of resistances they face The ultimate aim of the collection is to provide a critical but balanced overview of the emerging green economy in the Global South and point the way to possible adjustments alternatives or radical resistance depending on different situations This book was originally published as a special issue of Third World Quarterly Sustainable Livelihoods in Kalahari Environments Deborah Sporton, David S. G. Thomas, 2002 This edited collection provides a comprehensive overview of the dynamics of contemporary natural resource based livelihoods and implications for their sustainability in the context of the Kalahari environment of southern Africa a region subject to marked spatial and temporal natural variability Each chapter is written by an active Kalahari researcher and addresses from an environmental or a social perspective the implications of different policies for rural livelihoods and coping strategies In each chapter one or more of the key tenets of environment policy and structural land use change provides the central element around which the sustainable livelihoods theme is considered Although the focus of the book is the Kalahari introductory and concluding chapters in turn contextualise the research and discuss key enviro development issues which resonate across the individual chapters with relevance for wider global debates
