

Nature and Definition of International Law

Introduction

Law is the element of the society which helps to develop a framework within which rights and duties can be established. The world today requires a method where interstate relations can be conducted, and International Law fills this gap. The United Nations developed this body of International Law for the purpose of promoting international peace and security.

Countries come together to make binding rules that they believe will benefit their citizens. International Laws promote peace, justice, common interests and trade. States work together to strengthen International Law because it plays an important role in society. International Law is directly and strongly influenced by the writings of jurists and publicists, instructions to diplomatic agents, important conventions even when they are not ratified, and arbitral awards.

Definition of International Law

According to Oppenheim, International Law is a "Law of Nations or it is the name for the body of customary law and conventional rules which are considered to be binding by civilized States in their intercourse with each other."

Thus, International Law can be considered as treaties, set of rules and agreements between countries that are binding between them. International Law governs how nations must interact with other nations. It is extremely useful in regulating the issue of jurisdiction which arises when people trade among different States. The main purpose of International Law is to promote justice, peace and common interest.

Relevance and Function of International Law

International Law grew out of necessity. As International engagement increased, International Law expanded. International Law is the most convenient form of regulating world order in the present-day world. International Law aims to maintain international peace and security, which provide for fundamental rights, freedoms and human rights, to refrain the State from the use of threat or force against the territorial integrity of any other State, to provide for the right of self-determination to people, to solve International problems by achieving International cooperation, to use peaceful means for settlement of international disputes.

Principles of International Law

International Law is based on the following two principles:

1. Jus Gentium: These set of rules do not form part of a legal statute but mutually governs the relationship between two nations.
