

ROI OTTLEY has known intimately nearly every important figure he writes about as well as the less famous ones. His book has been more than ten years in the making and is a careful reporter's guide to the obscure corners and crevices of the black world. Mr. Ottley has lived in Harlem and other key centers and visited the West Indies. Born in New York, he went through public schools, spent three years at the University of Michigan, and two more studying law, Redup, bellhop, and soda when he turned newspaperman and spent seven years covering Cuba as reporter, editor, and columnist for the New York Amsterdam Star News, also contributing articles to nationally-known publications on various aspects of Negro life.

In "New World A-Coming," there are answers to many questions of his importance to a growing and deepening democracy. How does a "Negro" fit in to a Negro today? What is the Negro's attitude toward his white employer, toward the white man's assumption of superiority, toward the white man's institutions? Do Negroes want American democracy, or communism, socialism, fascism, or fascist Negroism? How does the Negro actually live, and what is his standard? What is his moral standard the same as those of the white man? What is his reaction to democracy? What happens to a white person who marries a Negro? Do Negroes believe in marriage between white and black? Will the Negro seek to wreck capitalism upon the white man if he gets arms and opportunity? What are the Negro's leaders today? Do Negroes regard every white man as a foe? What would the Negro do if the United States were ruled by the Negroes?
