Taylor Edmisten,2001-10-15 a compelling story of female initiation St Petersburg Times I read Patricia Edmistens dramatic and sensuous debut novel The Mourning of Angels in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks Her marvelous evocation of the first days of the Peace Corps provided an escape from the sadness of New York City where I live as well as a much needed perspective on the savagery of that act The Mourning of Angels captures the innocence of 1962 and 1963 before the Kennedy assassination when many of us swept up in the idealism of such a venture joined the Peace Corps and journeyed to countries wed never heard of and when young women seized the opportunity for a kind of adventure that until then had almost solely been the purview of men Lydia Schaefer Edmistens 23 year old protagonist from Milwaukee Wisconsin is a tough principled sometimes provocative but always emotionally receptive young woman determined to do her job as a health care worker first in Arequipa Peru and later in the coastal town of Ica In straightforward beautifully descriptive prose subtly impregnated with the political and cultural history of Peru Edmisten charts Lydia Schaefers journey from innocence she is a Catholic girl still a virgin the product of a protective loving home to a stark tragic maturity Lydia describes her view beyond her barriada in Arequipa Gray and white dominate the landscape No road is paved There are no trees Nothing green No spring flowers interfere with the dreariness Looking up however there is visual relief Misti a 19 150 foot volcano said to be dormant by experts but alive to those who know her tremors rises proudly over The City of my Hope Snow lavishly bleeds down her sides like the white mantle of the Madonna As this image of the Virgins cloak implies Lydia struggles with her strong Catholic beliefs in the face of rampant infant mortality the yearly pregnancies of poor women and the Churchs refusal to allow birth control Interestingly she never gives up her Catholicism but rather gradually adapts the religion to her new knowledge and beliefs much as Indians force the Catholic church to incorporate native rituals into the liturgy She breaks her own rule to remain a virgin until marriage With a sensuality that is both innocent and literally rapturous Edmisten writes of Lydia making love with her in country co worker Rafael He is mestizo with a Spanish father and Indian mother They are journeying back to his village beyond Machu Picchu when they stop to swim in a mountain pool and then make love Rafaels kiss is moist and sweet and as he eases on top of me it becomes more familiar more urgent The air is fresh and fragrant a light breeze glances off our warm bodies I look up at blinding white clouds and reach my arms out to them We remain immobile for a few minutes and then slowly rock A condor soars overhead I have read of eagles mating in mid air free falling unaware of the doom below It was like that The doom she senses in her moment of sexual abandon fortells
