Rearing Responsible Children:

Raising a Responsible Child: Elizabeth Ellis, 1996-01-01 It has often been said Give a man a fish and he has food for a day Teach him to fish and he can provide for himself over a lifetime Raising a Responsible Child explains the phenomenon of the overindulgent parent who helps and protects too much and the underdeveloped child who never really learns to stand on his or her own feet Today many parents are especially prone to shower their children with love and attention and attempt to minimize stress by doing for them In the scurry of modern life parents often can't resist giving in to children's demands or solving their problems just to keep the peace While this is basically a loving approach it does not teach children how to be responsible and independent Parents learn the hard way that their overindulgence does more harm than good their children will only come to them with more demands and act helpless in the face of new problems If you find yourself entrenched in this pattern you can change by using a system of consistent straight forward and logical rules every day You can teach your children to take responsibility for their actions and earn their privileges and you will find perhaps to your surprise that they are willing and ready to do so Some of the issues this book will help you to deal with are The whiny and overly demanding preschooler The small child who throws tantrums in public to get his way The older child who is inconsiderate of family members The teenager who is constantly late for school The young adult who can't get her life together and mooches off her parents indefinitely Many parents discover that the tried and true methods detailed here not only help their children handle emotions in a more mature and constructive manner but also result in higher self esteem and a happier outlook on life

Taking Responsibility for Children Samantha Brennan, Robert Noggle, 2007-12-04 What do we as a society and as parents in particular owe to our children? Each chapter in Taking Responsibility for Children offers part of an answer to that question. Although they vary in the approaches they take and the conclusions they draw, each contributor explores some aspect of the moral obligations owed to children by their caregivers. Some focus primarily on the responsibilities of parents, while others focus on the responsibilities of society and government. The essays reflect a mix of concern with the practical and the philosophical aspects of taking responsibility for children, addressing such topics as parental obligations, the rights and entitlements of children, the responsibility of the state, the role and nature of public education in a liberal society, the best ways to ensure adequate child protection, the licensing of parents, children's religious education, and children's health. Taking Responsibility for Children will be of interest to philosophers, advocates for children's interests, and those interested in public policy, especially as it relates to children and families.

Agricultural mechanisation and child labour in developing countries Vos, Rob, Takeshima, Hiroyuki, 2021-12-30 Child labour in agriculture remains a global concern Agriculture is the sector where most child labour is found Employment of children mostly relates to farm household poverty in developing countries This raises the question of the extent to which the modernisation of agriculture prevents the use of child labour while also leading to higher productivity One of the central questions in this context is whether agricultural mechanisation helps limit children's employment Available studies have put forward opposing hypotheses but rigorous empirical evidence is scant The present study aims to fill some of this void by studying the evidence from comparable farm household survey data in seven developing countries including three in Asia India Nepal and Vietnam and four in sub Saharan Africa Ethiopia Ghana Nigeria and Tanzania Various key findings emerge First many children are found to engage in productive activities in studied countries The prevalence is particularly high in African countries such as in Ethiopia where more than one third of children aged 5-14 years engage in farm or off farm work Second while the prevalence of child labour in agriculture i.e. when productive engagement is detrimental to schooling and child growth is much lower at 10% or less in seven countries they are still sizable in absolute terms at least 6 million children in these countries partake in agricultural work at the expense of opportunities in adulthood Third agricultural mechanization reflected in farm household's use of machinery such as tractors significantly reduces the likelihood of use of children's labour and increases school attendance Fourth the measured impacts of mechanization are only modest however and likely indirect that is dependent on the extent to which mechanization helps improve household income and on local conditions such as quality of rural infrastructure and accessibility of education and other social services Overall promotion of agricultural mechanization can help prevent use of child labour To be truly impactful however related support measures should be embedded in broader strategies to enable agricultural productivity growth and improve livelihoods of poor rural households
