Inhaltsangabe Introduction The last two years mark a turning point in public perception of human induced climate change as a problem of global importance The widespread acceptance that most of the observed increase in globally averaged temperatures since the mid 20th century is very likely due to the observed increase in anthropogenic greenhouse gas GHG concentrations has increased political pressure on governments to reduce GHG emissions At the same time rising oil prices have made the reduction of dependence on energy imports and diversification of the energy mix strategic imperatives for many countries around the world While governments worldwide are confronted with this dual challenge it is of special relevance to China On the one hand China has recently become the world s largest emitter of CO2 accounting for 24% of global annual CO2 emissions China is therefore one of the most important players to effectively mitigate global warming and pressure from governments around the world on China to join emission reductions efforts is mounting On the other hand energy demand is growing exponentially and China is increasingly relying on energy imports to satisfy energy needs Worried that growing dependency on energy imports may be accompanied by foreign policy and economic pressures that might threaten national security as well as social and political stability China has implemented a number of policies to address this issue ranging from policies to save energy and reduce energy intensity to the diversification of oil supply sources and routes the support of equity oil overseas acquisitions and the build up of strategic oil reserves to the diversification of the energy portfolio In line with the objective to diversify the composition of the energy mix China's leadership is increasingly realizing the need to reduce emissions and support renewable energy development At a recently held Politburo study session President Hu Jintao exclaimed Our task is tough and our time is limited Party organisations and governments at all levels must give priority to emission reduction and bring the idea deep into people's hearts To address the issue of energy security the Chinese government has adapted a two pronged approach While measures to promote energy savings and efficiency curb the increase in energy demand the support of renewable and nuclear energy reduces dependency on energy imports and contributes to the broadening of the
