

HIC Conversation with Marnie Hughes-Warrington, Chiel van den Akker, and Moira Pérez, edited and introduced by João Ohara

Pasts and Futures for the Theory and Philosophy of History

Abstract: In this conversation, we explore some of the current questions approached in the theory and philosophy of history. Three participants in the field reflect on their professional trajectories, the intellectual traditions from which these stem, and the theoretical questions surrounding historical knowledge and our historical condition.

Keywords: philosophy of history, theory of history, historicity, historical knowledge

It is often said that historians are “theory-averse,” whatever meaning we attribute to the term “theory.” There is some truth to this claim: at least some historians have had a complicated relationship with the (social and cultural) theory they need to borrow from sociologists and anthropologists. Some were even more reticent regarding literary theory, and perhaps most historians either ignored or bemoaned what little philosophers had to say about the epistemology of historiography. Nevertheless, at least in some countries, such as Brazil or the Netherlands, history departments have for quite some time now had in-house specialists in the “theory of history,” and journals and events dedicated to this specialty have been organized with plenty of submissions.¹ So, it is perhaps safe to say that just as some historians are averse to talking about theory, others have shown a great deal of interest in the theoretical aspects of their discipline (again, whatever meaning they attribute to the term “theory”).

We could tell many different stories about such a specialty. For some, it is the story that goes from the “speculative philosophy of history” through the “analytical philosophy of history” to “narrativism.” Others prefer to frame it in the spirit of the German genre of Historik and its developments. Others still start from neo-Kantianism and go all the way to “French theory,” “postmodernism,” and the

The New Social Studies Barbara Slater Stern,2009-11-01 This volume The New Social Studies People Projects and Perspectives is not an attempt to be the comprehensive book on the era Given the sheer number of projects that task would be impossible However the current lack of knowledge about the politics people and projects of the NSS is unfortunate as it often appears that new scholars are reinventing the wheel due to their lack of knowledge about the history of the social studies field The goal of this book then is to sample the projects and individuals involved with the New Social Studies NSS in an attempt to provide an understanding of what came before and to suggest guidance to those concerned with social studies reform in the future especially in light of the standardization of curriculum and assessment currently underway in many states The authors who contributed to this project were recruited with several goals in mind including a broad range of ages interests and experiences with the NSS from participants during the NSS era through new young scholars who had never heard much about the NSS As many of the authors remind us in their chapters much has been written of the failure of the NSS However in every chapter of this book the authors also point out the remnants of the projects that remain

Understanding History Jonathan Gorman,1992 Has any question about the historical past ever been finally answered

Of course there is much disagreement among professional historians about what happened in the past and how to explain it. But this incisive study goes one step further and brings into question the very ability of historians to gather and communicate genuine knowledge about the past. Understanding History applies this general question from the philosophy of history to economic history of American slaveholders. Do we understand the American slaveholders? Has the last word on the subject been said? Both the alleged profitability of slavery and the purported causes of the American Civil War are philosophically analyzed. Traditional narrative history and econometric history are examined and compared and their different philosophical assumptions made explicit. The problem of justifying historical methodologies is first set in the wider context of the philosophical problem of knowledge then lucidly explained and resolved along pragmatic lines. The novelty of Gorman's approach lies in its comparison of narrative with econometric history, its analysis of empathetic understanding in terms of cost-benefit analysis and its elucidation of the metaphysical presuppositions of empiricism. It stands out especially for the clarity, rigor and simplicity of its arguments.

History and Politics In Post-Colonial India Michael Gottlob, 2011-05-30 The writing of history in India has been fraught with controversies. From the storm over textbooks in the 1970s and the furore over the Babri Masjid in the 1990s to the flaring up of religious sentiments over beef eating and the Ram Sethu, this book provides a synoptic view of teaching and writing of history in post-colonial India. Michael Gottlob explores historical research and teaching as important components contributing to the development of a national identity and ideas of citizenship in post-colonial India. He shows how the urge to decolonize and recover the self has given rise to several approaches that attempt to reclaim Indian history from its colonial past. The book discusses diverse areas like methodological research and public use of history, cultural identity and diversity, nationalism and communalism and social movements and deconstructs their far-reaching implications in contemporary India. It also examines the role of women, Dalits and Adivasis to understand their position in the multicultural reality of India.

Gender and Archiving: Past, Present, Future Noortje Willems, Saskia Bultman, Sylvia Holla, 2017 This 37th volume of the Yearbook of Women's History focuses on the meaning and potential of archiving for enhancing gender equality and the position of women worldwide. More than just storehouses of knowledge, archives offer new ways for understanding the past, debating the present and creating the future. Focusing on both traditional and non-traditional archival practices in various parts of the world, the Yearbook of Women's History explores the meaning of archiving for women and women's history. Besides investigating the feminist potential of the archive, it also examines questions of erasure and forgetting. While archives may have emancipatory or democratizing potential, practices of discarding equally shape the histories that can be written and the stories that can be told. The articles in this volume are alternated with descriptions of collections and institutes and the topics addressed cover a full range of archival theory and practice. This volume has been produced by the editorial board of the Yearbook of Women's History in collaboration with Atria institute on gender equality and women's history in Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

Key Metaphors for History Javier

Fernández-Sebastián,2024-04-03 This book casts a fresh look at what to date has been a relatively unexplored question the enormous value and usefulness of the metaphor in the understanding and writing of history and at the historical culture reflected by these metaphors Mapping a wide range of tropes present in historiography and public discourse the book identifies some of the key metaphorical resources employed by historians politicians and journalists to represent time history memory the past the present and the future and examines a selection of analytical concepts of a temporal nature built upon unmistakeably metaphorical foundations such as modernity event process revolution crisis progress decline or transition The analysis of these and other pillars on which modern history has been built whether as a philosophy of history as an academic discipline or as a set of events will interest graduates and scholars dealing with the historical and social sciences and the humanities in general Key Metaphors for History offers a broad overview of historiography and historiosophy from an unfrequented point of view halfway between conceptual history theory of history and metaphorology Moreover it constitutes a form of self reflection of the historian on his or her own positionality when researching and writing history A
