Growth in Open Economies J.A. Hanson, 2012-12-06 The years following World War II have witnessed an increasing interest in the effects of growth on trade the patterns of international specialization and the terms of trade On the one hand some English economists have maintained the Ricardian tradition of diminishing returns rising food prices and therefore declining British terms of trade while on the other hand Prebisch Singer and other critics have attempted to document and explain a long run decline in the terms of trade of the underdeveloped countries Finally in a reaction to this concentration on a single factor as the determinant of international price movements a group of economists began a systematic investigation of the role of growth in trade and the terms of trade using neoclassical assumption This study particularly in its assumptions regarding demand falls into the tradition of the last group However it extends the tradition by treating growth as a continuous process dependent on saving out of produced income and the growth rate of population in two trading economies Therefore in addition to answering the comparative statics questions regarding the trends in the terms of trade it develops the conditions which guarantee that the two economies will approach a state of unique long run balanced growth in which all per capita variables as well as the terms of trade stabilize Moreover these methods permit some discussion of changes in the patterns of specialization Background Readings ,1970 Power, Powerlessness, and Globalization Opoku

Agyeman,2014-08-20 This book is about imperialism driven globalization its historic impact on Africa Latin America and Asia and over time the varied responses of the national political units and regional entities in these continents to the challenges of building countervailing power and laying foundations for independent development Where genuine recovery and empowerment have emerged this has been the result not only of the pursuit of dignitist political and economic values that emphasize robust and sustained productivity geared toward uplifting the living standards and dignity of all the members of the national society but also of the creation of indigenous institutions whose relations with the external world are defined by equality rather than dependence and subordination Opoku Agyeman argues that dignification is the fundamentally necessary response to imperialism s inevitable afflictions of national racial humiliation It is the most crucial ingredient in the complex of motivations that propel formerly weak nation states and regional communities to rise up and defend the honor of their people As Mao Zedong told the world in 1949 Ours will no longer be a nation subject to insult and humiliation We have stood up This study argues emphatically that it is a country s or region s developed or developing capabilities not its historic and continuing victimization or habitual dependence on charitable aid and other altruistic interventions from the international community that determines its success in escaping the scourge of powerlessness and underdevelopment It further maintains that a people who have been brought low through brutal dehumanizing imperialism cannot bypass the need for redemptive empowerment if they wish to regain honor and a proper place in the world Finally it takes issue with Joseph Stiglitz Jeffrey Sachs and others like them whose moralistic critiques of the rapacity of imperialistic globalization carry the unfortunate implication that it is possible for a fair and just world social order to come out of incremental reforms of philanthropically motivated developed powerful countries in the structure and operations of global capitalism
