General Principles and Procedures R.D. O'Brien, 2012-12-06 The following remarks are intended to serve as an introduction to this particular volume as well as to the whole series of volumes of which this is the first The intent of the series is to provide an authentic and relatively complete statement about the status of our understanding of the receptors The models we had in mind while developing this series are The Enzymes The Proteins and comparable groups of books The receptors have received a degree of importance and richness of understanding that makes them deserving of comprehensive and complete coverage The study of these molecules which may well include such diverse items as the receptors for hormones neurohumors pheromones taste and many other chemical signals have a great deal in common so that the student of any one of them will wish to know the status of research about the others This commonality is in part substantive and in part practical and procedural Substantively the receptors are all macromolecules whose function is to receive some form of chemical signal and transduce it to a form which is usable by the receiving cell In this way a chemical signal may lead to a neural response to the turning on of a cell's chromosomes or to the activation of some enzymic apparatus to produce or release a substance Because most of these processes are noncatalytic special techniques not previously commonplace in biochemistry have been developed in order to study the receptors

Prolactin E. Flückiger,E. DelPozo,K. v. Werder,2012-12-06 Lactogenic hormone activity was first observed in bovine pituitary extracts by Stricker and Gritter in 1928 working in Bouin s laboratory in Strasbourg Since that time prolactin has been shown to exist in anterior pituitary extracts of almost all vertebrate species investigated Although its biology was extensively studied in many mammalian species the existence of prolactin in the human was generally doubted despite the positive evidence produced by such researchers as Pasteels This can partly be explained by the fact that human growth hormone isolated in 1961 is itself a potent lactogen in contrast to nonprimate growth hormones and is present in the normal human pituitary in much greater amounts than prolactin As a result there was a lag of nearly 10 years until prolactin was unanimously accepted as a hormone of the human pituitary separate from human growth hormone In 1970 new bioassay techniques permitted the demonstration of prolactin bioactivity in the serum of postpartum women and galactorrhea patients and chromatographic methods led to the isolation and purification of human prolactin allowing the establishment of a specific radioimmunoassay for this hormone This opened the road to the understanding of prolactin physiology and pathophysiology in the human which has revolutionized clinical neuroendocrinology and reproductive endocrinology Particularly hyperprolactinemia has turned out to be one of the most common endocrine syndromes
