FATHER AND SON RESCUED AT SEA

Last Friday morning, Australian man Ben Hammond and his teenage son Michael were rescued from their fishing boat in the Coral Sea. They had set off from Murray Island, off the north-east coast of Australia, twenty days earlier on a fishing trip. They had only planned to go for a few hours.

'Everything was great at first,' said Mr Hammond. 'The weather was fine, and the fishing was good. But then there was a sudden wind. We lost control and were sent out to sea.' The wind was the beginning of a massive storm.

After a few days, their boat ran out of fuel. They couldn't call for help because their mobile phones had no signal, so they turned them off to save the batteries. Rescuers had difficulty finding them because of the storm. However, the storm may have saved their lives. 'It was lucky the weather was quite bad,' said Michael 'If it hadn't rained we wouldn't have had anything to drink. We only had two bottles of water to begin with.' Over the next few weeks, they just tried to stay alive and well. They protected themselves from the sun by covering their heads. They managed to catch some fish, which they ate raw. And they drank the rain water.

Eventually, they discovered they had a mobile phone signal. They sent text messages to their family. The emergency services found them and a rescue helicopter was sent to pick them up. They were taken to a clinic where they were treated for sunburn and dehydration. Mr Hammond had lost over 20 kilograms. He said, 'I'm just happy to be alive!'
