

In the case of the human being, the psychologist begins his study with an investigation of the behavior that characterizes the infant before birth. He considers the subsequent maturational growth changes by which this relatively helpless, non-verbal, biological organism becomes an effective adult person capable of living . . .

READINGS IN THE

How and why do we see the people and things around us? Trying to answer this question—scientifically called the study of perception—may seem at first glance to be of trivial rank. But understanding this simple fact, perhaps just because it is one of the most universal and basic of human experiences, is for no reason simple.

PSYCHOLOGY OF

Most human beings constantly struggle with the task of growing up. Our human life histories provide no secure introduction to this struggle. Throughout our lifetimes we try to balance increasingly mature human intellectuality and social behavior, to gain increased recognition from those whose judgments we respect. . . .

HUMAN GROWTH

It would be a mistake, of course, to assume that there is any one pattern of child rearing that can be called "The American Pattern." The United States contains a rich variety of subcultures. . . . Differences of religion, of ethnic origin, of socioeconomic status, and of family size all contribute to the great variety of culture.

AND DEVELOPMENT

It is clear that effective learning cannot take place unless a strong motive is present. It is equally clear that it is difficult to motivate a child whose energies are spent learning about himself in self-oriented situations or whose energy . . . and all such a character that the work in school does not seem to contribute to his needs.

BALLER

Middle-class families are more rigorous than lower-class families in their training of children for reading and arithmetic skills. They generally begin training earlier. Furthermore, middle-class families place more emphasis on the early development of responsibility for the self and on individual achievement. Finally, middle-class . . .
