Mobilizing For World War I: The Homefront

Carefully read the following passage about how the United States mobilized for World War I. Describe these efforts on the chart.

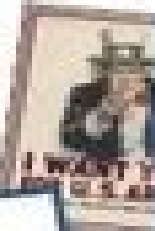

When World War I broke out in 1914, it was a total war. In order to win, the United States had to mobilize its entire resources. This meant that the government had to take control of the economy. The government had to ration food and clothing. It had to control the production of goods. It had to control the distribution of goods. It had to control the prices of goods. It had to control the wages of workers. It had to control the interest rates on loans. It had to control the stock market. It had to control the foreign exchange market. It had to control the gold market. It had to control the silver market. It had to control the copper market. It had to control the iron market. It had to control the steel market. It had to control the coal market. It had to control the oil market. It had to control the gas market. It had to control the electricity market. It had to control the telephone market. It had to control the telegraph market. It had to control the radio market. It had to control the newspaper market. It had to control the book market. It had to control the film market. It had to control the music market. It had to control the art market. It had to control the science market. It had to control the medicine market. It had to control the law market. It had to control the religion market. It had to control the education market. It had to control the government market. It had to control the military market. It had to control the navy market. It had to control the army market. It had to control the air force market. It had to control the space market. It had to control the future market.

Directions: Match the efforts to support the war.

What did they do?	Reasons
Went to work	War Bonds
Planned for the war	New Taxes
Control the economy, rationing, and more for war	War Industries Board
Control the government, military, and navy for war	Food Administration
Control the stock market, bond and loan	Victory Gardens
Control the foreign exchange market	Voluntary Conservation

Helping the Country

Once Congress declared war, President Wilson quickly created the Committee on Public Information under the direction of George Creel. Creel used every possible means to encourage American patriotism. Creel established posters and speeches. He commissioned George M. Cohen to write patriotic songs intended to stir the nation's emotions. Indeed, "Over There" became an overnight success, inspiring thousands to do everything possible in the service. Creel depicted a patriotic American man declaring "I Want You for the U.S. Army" to recruit soldiers. An army of about four million men joined the fight. The Creel Committee employed millions of
