

SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS TO DETECT CHILDHOOD CANCER

Some visible signs on the body are:

- Bruises or bruises that appear without explanation.
- Increase in the size of the abdomen or any strangely shaped part of the body.
- Repetitive bleeding from the nose or gums.
- White spots on the pupil or strabismus, that is, "crossed eyes".

- Lumps or swellings in the body, especially in the neck, groin, testicles, or armpits.
- Paleness or spots that appear on the skin without explanation.

Symptoms to watch out for:

- Sudden weight loss.
- Repetitive fevers and sweats without obvious explanation.
- The girl or boy reports feeling dizzy, body aches, headaches, or bone pain (back, knees...).
- Vomiting or recurrent diarrhea.

Some changes that may occur in mood:

- Loss of interest in routine activities due to fatigue, discouragement or unusual sleepiness.

It is essential to talk with boys and girls about the importance of knowing their own body and expressing the changes they notice in it. Open communication and a trusting relationship make it easier for warning signs and symptoms to be detected.

When cancer is detected at an early stage, it is more likely to respond to effective treatment, which increases the chance of survival, decreases suffering and often requires cheaper and less intensive treatment"
