Sodium/Potassium Pump

The Na+/K+ pump also known as "Na+/K+ ATPase" actively pumps sodium and potassium using ATP as the source of energy. This pump actively moves ions from area of low concentration to an area of high concentration against the concentration gradient. During this exchange, 3 sodium ions are pumped out of the cell and 2 potassium ions are pumped into the cell. This establishes a higher extracellular sodium concentration and a higher intracellular concentration of potassium. The separation of ions and their charge generates a negative intracellular electrical membrane potential due to the high concentration of potassium and low concentration of sodium. The pump requires ATP to function and if ATP is not available, then the pump will cease working. A study done using an ATP inhibitor (DNP) tracked radioactive sodium efflux and showed the result of an inactivated Na+/K+ pump. The pump inactivity caused net sodium efflux to decrease over time since the pump stopped exchanging Na+ ions with K+ ions up concentration gradient.

Similarly, red blood cells (and many other cells) need pumps to maintain osmotic balance and cell volume. If the pumps do not work properly, then the concentration of ions in the cells will increase creating an influx of water to balance to try to maintain osmosis balance, eventually leading to lysing of the cells. The pumps are a defensive measure to move ions against their concentration gradient to prevent accumulation that will alter cell functioning.

This is good, but do you want also to give us the simplified form, and explain the assumptions to simplify it?
—RichardOlivo

The pump belongs with the concentration table, before we dealt with equilibrium potentials. Try to follow class sequence more exactly.
—RichardOlivo

"lower intracellular" would be better, since the outside solution is huge and not really affected by the pump.
—RichardOlivo

doesn't belong with the pump story —RichardOlivo

where is the figure and a caption for this? The paragraph is otherwise fairly good! —RichardOlivo

Pastoral Care and Community in Late Medieval Germany Deeana Copeland Klepper,2022-12-15 Pastoral Care and Community in Late Medieval Germany explores how local religious culture was constructed in medieval European Christian society through close study of a set of neglected late fourteenth century manuscripts The Mirror of Priests is a pastoral work written by Albert an Augustinian canon from the Bavarian market town of Diessen to guide local priests in their work with parishioners Multiple versions of the text in Albert s own hand survive and by comparing them Deeana Copeland Klepper shows how ostensibly universal religious ideals and laws were adapted interpreted and repurposed by those given responsibility to implement them thereby crafting distinctive local expressions of Christianity The vision of Christian community that emerges from Albert s pastoral guide is one in which the messiness of ordinary life is evident Albert s imagined parish was marked out by geographic and legal boundaries property and jurisdictional rights tithes and sacramental responsibility as well as symbolic realities By situating the Mirror of Priests within Albert s physical and conceptual spaces Klepper affirms the centrality of the parish and its community for those living under the rubric of Christianity especially outside of large cities Pivoting between the materiality of texts and the sociocultural contexts of an overlooked manuscript tradition Pastoral Care and Community in Late Medieval Germany offers fresh insights into the role of parish priests the pastoral manual genre and late medieval religious life
