Marine Ecotourism Issues And Experiences:

Marine Ecotourism Brian Garrod, Julie Wilson, 2003-01-03 Marine ecotourism is a major growth area within ecotourism itself a rapidly expanding area within tourism as a whole The activity has been attracting increasing attention both from the popular media and from professionals and academics with an interest in tourism's potential to contribute to sustainable development However there is a growing consensus that far too often the term has been used merely as a tool for capitalising on the good intentions of tourists without the industry itself having to make fundamental changes to their products or to the way they go about their operations This has often been to the detriment of local environments economies and host communities Yet the ideal of ecotourism as it is properly understood is to present local communities with a sustainable development alternative one that works to the benefit of local ecosystems local economies and local people The purpose of the first section of this book is therefore to introduce the concept of marine ecotourism and to draw out some of the key issues involved in ensuring that marine ecotourism is developed in a genuinely sustainable manner The second section then discusses some practical experiences of planning and managing marine ecotourism from around the world identifying common problems and discussing what might constitute good practice in addressing those problems Aspects of Tourism, 7, 2003

Marine Ecotourism Carl Cater, Erlet Cater, 2007 Covering economic marketing planning and regulation issues this book also considers the vital role of marine ecotourism in raising awareness of the significance of the seas and oceans to sustainable coastal livelihoods The Economics of Protected Marine Species: Concepts in Research and Management Kristy Wallmo, Kathryn Bisack, Daniel K. Lew, Dale E. Squires, 2016-10-21 Protected marine species have populations that are depleted decreasing or are at risk of extinction or local extirpation As of 2015 The International Union for the Conservation of Nature a global environmental organization lists approximately 737 marine species worldwide that are considered at risk of extinction Many are provided legal protection through national laws requiring research and management measures aimed at recovering and maintaining the species at a sustainable population level Integral to the policy decision process involving the management and recovery of marine species is the consideration of trade offs between the economic and ecological costs and benefits of protection This suggests that economics at its core the study of trade offs has a significant role In the U S a somewhat traditional use of economics in protected species research and management has involved cost minimization or cost effectiveness analyses to help select or prioritize conservation actions Economic research has also provided estimates of public non market benefits of recovering species which can be used in larger management frameworks such as ecosystem based management and coastal and marine spatial planning Inherent in much of this research however are complex biological and ecological relationships in which varying degrees of scientific uncertainty are present Addressing this type of uncertainty can affect the economic outcomes related to protected species For example recent work suggests that increasing scientific precision in biological sampling and models can greatly affect the magnitude of economic benefits to commercial fisheries while other research suggests that public non market benefits of species recovery are sensitive to uncertainty about baseline population estimates Previous research has illustrated the importance of understanding the biological ecological and economic aspects of protected species management and recovery In this research topic we synthesize current protected marine species economic research and expand the discussion on present and future challenges related to protected species economics The series of manuscripts brings together an array of prominent researchers and advances our understanding of the ecological and economic aspects of managing and recovering protected marine species

A Sea Monster's Tale Colin Speedie,2021-06-08 There are few marine creatures as spectacular as the Basking Shark At up to 11 metres in length and seven tonnes in weight this colossal plankton feeding fish is one of the largest in the world second only to the whale shark Historically Basking Sharks were a familiar sight in the northern hemisphere off the coasts of Norway Scotland Ireland Canada and the USA for example In an 18th Century world without electricity they became the focus of active hunting for their huge livers containing large amounts of valuable oil primarily used in lamps Catch numbers were small enough to leave populations largely intact but during the 20th Century a new breed of hunter joined the fray some driven as much by a need for adventure as for financial gain With improved equipment and experience they exploited the shark on an industrial scale that drastically reduced numbers leading to localised near extinction in some areas From the 1970 s onward a new generation took to the seas this time with conservation in mind to identify where the shark might still be found in the waters around the British Isles employing new technologies to solve long standing mysteries about the behaviour of this elusive creature Using the best of both old and new research techniques the case was built to justify the species becoming one of the most protected sharks in the oceans Today the Basking Shark is a much loved cornerstone of our natural heritage There are positive signs that the population has stabilised and may even be slowly recovering from the damage of the past proving that timely conservation measures can be effective Join us on a journey amidst wild seas places people and conservation history in the battle to protect this iconic creature a true sea monster s tale
