Making Babies: Biomedical Technologies, Reproductive Ethics, and Public Policy Inmaculada de Melo-Martín, 2013-03-09

Each year roughly a million new cases of cancer appear in the US and more than 500 000 Americans die annually of premature death Although medical progress has slowed cancer mortality its incidence is increasing roughly six times faster than cancer mortality is decreasing Breast cancer in particular has been increasing about one percent each year since 1973 At least two of the factors responsible for this surge in breast cancer are women s use of medically prescribed synthetic hormones and the exposure of the entire population to chemicals such as dioxin Both exposures increase the likelihood of breast cancer Although many ethicists worry about involuntary societal imposition of chemicals such as dioxin through industrial and agricultural processes allegedly voluntary exposures also constitute both a public health problem and a biomedical ethics difficulty Physicians recommend synthetic hormones for example to women who apparently take them voluntarily In the case of in vitro fertilization doctors prescribe hormones to induce egg production and to increase the chances of reproduction for couples who are unable to have children Despite the benefits of medical technologies such as hormone stimulation and in vitro fertilization they also carry great risks The price that childless women pay for their opportunity to have children through in vitro fertilization may be their own increased risk of diseases such as breast cancer that are hormone dependent

Taking Biology Seriously Inmaculada De Melo-Martín, 2005-10-06 Discussions of human biology and its consequences for ethics and public policy are often misguided Both proponents and critics of behavioral genetics reproductive cloning and genetic testing have mistaken beliefs about the role of genes in human life Taking Biology Seriously calls attention to the social context in which both the science and our ethical precepts and public policies play a role
