China Dreams Irene Mahoney, 2012-05-11 Chen Shang Li slept well but he was stiff when he woke It wasn't the damp he was used to that And now it was almost summer and the weather was warm He was getting old he knew it yesterday as he herded his ducks across the fields He was tired long before the sun set He had slept in the shadow of a large school building by the side of a rice field He always recognized the big sign Ho Ping You could see it from far off He could not read very well but he knew these characters meant Harmony It was quiet and safe with no one to bother him provided he got on his way with the first light before the cooks were up to fix rice for the students The mist was still heavy but he could see the shadowy wings of the great white cranes hovering over the rice field His ducks were already awake pecking here and there amid the stubble It was still too dark to count them but he didn't worry in all the years he had been herding he had never lost a single bird That was why he could still get hired They knew that even though he was an old man he could be trusted to know his business He picked up his staff and clucked softly softly so he wouldn't disturb anyone who might be awake He should reach the market by late afternoon It took him longer now three days instead of two but no matter he would get there with his flock safe and sound It was better to go slow as he always explained it gave the ducks more time to eat along the way so they would be fatter when they reached the market

Effacing the Self Marc De Kesel, 2023-08-01 In spirituality and mysticism many seek a counterbalance to the strong emphasis on the self that modernity demands of us We desire a fixed self on the one hand and are fascinated by selflessness on the other But is our fascination with selflessness not a ruse to make that self of ours even stronger And is that self critical question not the kernel of even traditional mysticism Marc De Kesel investigates some dark rooms of the mystical tradition to clarify this This is a book for all who want to free themselves from the conceptual frameworks and rigid dogmas of late modern religiosity The first part of the volume deals directly with early modern Christian mysticism and more specifically with the French spiritualit and discussions centered around the problem of what it means to love God in a pure radically unselfish way The second part explores the paradoxical dialectics between self and selflessness in relation to the way Christian religion deals with its own identity If Christian love is selfless why has Christianity in the end not given up its own self its own identity The third and last part of the volume discusses the dialectics between self and selflessness in three other domains popular spirituality politics and modern science It makes clear that selflessness is not limited to mysticism but is both a fascination and a problem paradox for modernity in many fields
