

A low-angle, upward-looking photograph of the interior of The Getty Center. The image captures the dramatic, curved architecture of the atrium. On the left, a large, curved wall features a complex, geometric lattice of light-colored panels. A prominent, thick, white cylindrical column stands in the center, supporting the ceiling. The ceiling itself is a smooth, light-colored curve with several small, dark circular lights. To the right, another curved wall is visible, featuring a series of horizontal, slatted panels. The overall color palette is dominated by light grays, whites, and the warm tones of the lattice and slats. The perspective creates a sense of height and architectural grandeur.
