Theoretical Geomorphology Adrian E. Scheidegger, 2012-12-06 The surface features of the Earth are commonly split into two categories the first of which comprises those features that are due to processes occurring inside the solid Earth endogenic features and the second those that are due to processes occurring outside the solid Earth exogenic features. Specifically the endogenic features are treated in the science of geodynamics the exogenic features in the science of geomorphology. I have treated the theoretical aspects of the endogenic features in my Principles of Geodynamics and it is my aim to supplement my earlier book with a discussion of the theory of the exogenic features the taxonomy of the latter having been discussed in my Systematic Geomorphology. It is my hope that the three books will together present a reasonably coherent if necessarily incomplete account of theoretical geology. Contrary to endogenic phenomena exogenic processes can often be directly observed as they occur the action of a river the development of a slope and the evolution of a shore platform are all sufficiently rapid so that they can be seen as they take place. This has the result that in geomorphology one is generally on much less speculative ground regarding the mechanics of the processes at work than one is in geodynamics.

Ten geomorphologists were asked to star gaze that is provide opinions about the future direction of their specialty. Each paper is supported by the literature that currently defines the research frontier.
