

Precious metal magic: catalytic wizardry

Magic: “Influencing the course of events by using mysterious or supernatural forces.” Precious metals are alluring and magical because of their inactivity toward chemical reactions; they are extremely stable and hence are also termed “noble metals.” During the industrial revolution mankind realized that noble metals have the power to influence the course of chemical events – through catalysis. A catalyst is defined as a substance that facilitates a chemical transformation without itself being consumed in the process; this power has a mysterious, almost magic-wand character. In this review we explore precious metal catalysis through the wide-angle lens of historical development and the atomic scale microscope of recent discoveries. Fundamental understanding of underlying mechanisms for catalytic oxidation processes reveals the magic and transforms the use of noble metals from instruments of adornment, trade and Edisonian industrialization, to key players in a new era of catalysis by design with potential for environmentally benign chemical processing.

New eras have dawned and the course of history has changed, simply due to mastery of the elements. The Iron Age, Bronze Age, and Nuclear Age are obvious examples, but the rise of industry through synthetic manipulation of the elements and more recent advances in medicine and nanotechnology bring us to yet another source point in history, brimming with potential. Surprisingly, by clever utilization of their chemical “inertness,” the chemistry of precious metals has emerged as one of the exciting frontiers for advanced understanding and applications, particularly in catalysis.

From then to now

Shiny, malleable, and resistant to corrosion, gold has been the most coveted precious metal since the time of the Pharaohs. In addition to its well-known uses in currency and jewelry, metalworkers found that the properties of gold were more than meets the eye. For example, gold alloy nanoparticles (defined as particles from 1 – 100nm in size) in the glass of the famous Lycurgus cup, c.a. 4th century AD, cause the color to change from green for reflected light (Fig. 1a) to red for transmitted light (Fig. 1b)¹. Nanoparticles of another precious metal, silver, are responsible
