Tom Perzanek of Octura Models, Chicago, uses Jig Saw to cut bulkheads and curved stringers for the prototype of his famous gas powered model Birc Hydros plane "White Head". The Jig Saw produces a smooth cut in small intricate sections of plywood and hardwood. Parts for motor and steering assembly were turned out on Universal Lathe.

Well known author, Bruce Ward, who designs electronic projects for national magazines, uses a Universal to machine printed circuit boards, drill chassis holes, and wind special coils. This multifunctional machine takes up less space than the average oscilloscope, yet provides tool room versatility.
