Abstract. Higher education institutions (HEIs) are one of the keystones of higher education (HE) system on both national and international level. They are expected to provide graduates with high quality education relevant for the labour market and to contribute to the economic growth through research and innovation. The overall objective of HEIs therefore is to provide service to the society. Furthermore nowadays, employability of graduates is emphasized more than academic quality of education; the value of education in the labour market is also a key future students' criterion in the selection of study programmes and HEIs. The new EU agenda for HE therefore highlights the need to tackle future skills mismatches and promote excellence in skills development as one of its key priorities. Due to the specific role of HEIs in the society the management of HEIs has to keep in mind that while they are managing its resources and internal stakeholders with the objective to follow the HEIs strategy and realise its goals and objectives, they are doing this within a broader scope, taking into account external stakeholders, to support the economic development and to ensure the social prosperity of a country in which they are operating.

1 Introduction

Higher education (HE) creates important economic and social benefits for the society and for educated individuals; these have been proven and evaluated in extensive scientific literature such as Becker and Lewis (1992), Psacharopoulos and Patrinos (2014); Hanushek and Woessmann (2008) and Bloom, Hartley, Rosovsky (2017). According to one of the estimates, net economic benefit of HE amounts to 160,000 USD for the individual and 100,000 USD for the society (OECD, 2008). In addition, HE further contributes to social development through research.

How the society takes advantage of the development potential of HE depends on both the quality of system-level governance and the quality of management of individual higher education institutions (HEIs). The focus of our research will therefore be the changes in the management of HE and HEIs in the EU and in Slovenia, and their impact on the attainment of social objectives of education and research, as defined in national and international strategic documents.

Governance comprises a complex web including the legislative framework, the characteristics of the institutions and how they relate to the whole system, how money is allocated to institutions and how they are accountable for the way it is spent, as well as less formal structures and relationships that steer and influence behaviour (OECD, 2003). Good governance in education systems promotes
