Population Dynamics Of A Philippine Rain Forest People The San Ildefonso Agta:

Population Dynamics of a Philippine Rain Forest People John D. Early, Thomas N. Headland, 1998 An important and significant contribution to anthropology Barry S Hewlett Washington State University The Agta Negrito people have been hunters and gatherers in the tropical rain forests of the Philippines for centuries This book investigates a small group of the Agta living on Luzon Island during their transition from a foraging society to a landless group of agricultural workers The core of the book is a demographic study of fertility mortality and migration over a 44 year period It is one of only two studies that have completely reconstructed the population dynamics of a foraging group without relying on mathematical models Ethnographic and narrative historical sections of the book establish the contexts for the demographic data and enhance the study's readability As a case history of social and population dynamics in a remote frontier region the work describes the impact of international commercial interests on both the rain forest and the landless peasantry seeking to survive The work is of exceptional value because of the difficulties of obtaining reliable demographic data from a foraging group and for the long term coverage of the quantitative database John D Early retired professor of anthropology at Florida Atlantic University Boca Raton is the author of several books most recently with John F Peters The Population Dynamics of the Mucjai Yanomama Thomas N Headland adjunct professor of linguistics at the University of Texas at Arlington and anthropology consultant for the Summer Institute of Linguistics is the coeditor of Tropical Deforestation The Human Dimension and of Emics and Ethics The Insider Outsider Debate

Schweitzer, 2000-04-01 In an age of heightened awareness of the threat that western industrialized societies pose to the environment hunters and gatherers attract particularly strong interest because they occupy the ecological niches that are constantly eroded Despite the denial of sovereignty the world's more than 350 million indigenous peoples continue to assert aboriginal title to significant portions of the world's remaining bio diversity As a result conflicts between tribal peoples and nation states are on the increase Today many of the societies that gave the field
