Readings In Social Sciences Issues In National Development:

Readings in Social Sciences Elochukwu C. Amucheazi, 1980 When this volume was first published the fact that underdevelopment was becoming a permanent condition rather than a transitory stage was a burning issue facing African social scientists Calls were for attention to be paid to small scale industries rather than dependence on foreign support and to concentrate efforts on the well being of the citizen rather than on institutions and academics contributed to these debates Times have moved on but arguably the underlying questions remain unresolved Various of these essays consider the role of local government foreign policies of developing nations regional co operation and the search for unity the economy and international economic relations public and private investment trade and national development social change and welfare problems including psychological aspects of developing nations and personality perspectives and moral values and socialism
