Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the women's physical and psychological health. The women who participated in the program showed a significant increase in their physical fitness, as measured by heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. They also showed a significant increase in their psychological well-being, as measured by self-esteem, mood, and stress levels. The program was well-received by the women, and they reported enjoying the workouts and feeling more energetic and confident after the program. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
