Minos Marcos McPeck Villatoro, 2003 A detective with the Nashville Homicide Unit Salvadoran American Romilia Chacon matches wits with a ruthless killer who has self styled himself as the mythical Minos the demon from Dante's Inferno and who is responsible for the killing of her older sister and is now targeting Romilia herself Minos Marcos McPeck Villatoro, 2005 Haunted by the death of her beloved sister Latina detective Romilia Chacon risks her life and her career as she embarks on a personal quest for vengeance against the brutal sadist a serial killer known as the Whisperer because of the cryptic messages he leaves at the scene of his horrific crimes Original Life Mapping as Cultural Legacy I-Chun Wang, Mary Theis, 2021-01-15 This volume celebrates a fascinating variety of nonfiction known as life writing This genre resonates quintessentially with the core of the humanities in its profoundly individual ways of fusing narrators with their narrative subjects The book brings together scholars from around the world to explore the personal mapping of such narrators in the context of their cultural legacies The hybrid fusions themselves form several subgenres that complement each other as they affirm human dignity and values and our need for human connection felt at all times but especially during times of globally met threats The ever expanding forms of hybridography here along with testimonies diaries letters and journals bear witness to how individuals have contrived to overcome their own traumatic sources of pain and suffering to discover joy and how to further map their pathways forward The narratives not only communicate important information and aesthetic beauty needed to prolong troubled lives due to social anxiety or mental illness but also challenge sociocultural issues involving stigma migration racial discrimination and persecution human trafficking and ecological concerns Global in scope personal in focus and historically and culturally contextualized the analyses provided here once again illustrate how much we have to learn from each other On Tuesday, when the Homeless Disappeared Marcos McPeck Villatoro, 2004 Marcos McPeck Villatoro is not afraid to discuss mysteries truths or injustices He has lived them Poet and novelist activist and radio personality Villatoro writes poetry steeped in formalism free verse and his own Salvadoran syntax This new collection is a memoir in poems telling how the world appears to a Latin American immigrant His sense of humanity is intact He has a family a job a life in the States But the face of the Mayan hero Tek'n Um'n hangs in his office and he has made clear all political positions by standing behind the wooden mask of a dead man Villatoro is a writer with a keen political sensibility and a sense of humor besides After confronting the reader with weighty issues he pauses to have an encounter with a curandera in a cornfield to speculate on a visit from extraterrestrials and to pay tribute to his free spirited loose living Uncle Jack who chewed forest mushrooms like a rabbit Then howled at a California night While whispering querida above open thighs Combining Borgean logic the grit of Neruda and a heady dose of Zen Villatoro offers a primer on how to integrate a history of brutality and injustice with the privilege and comfort of life in America A final section of poems is presented in Spanish only a statement of ascendance a strategy for identity preservation a gift to the cognoscenti Reading On Tuesday

Massey, 2008-02-01 Beginning in the 1990s immigrants to the United States increasingly bypassed traditional gateway cities such as Los Angeles and New York to settle in smaller towns and cities throughout the nation With immigrant communities popping up in so many new places questions about ethnic diversity and immigrant assimilation confront more and more Americans New Faces in New Places edited by distinguished sociologist Douglas Massey explores today s geography of immigration and examines the ways in which native born Americans are dealing with their new neighbors Using the latest census data and other population surveys New Faces in New Places examines the causes and consequences of the shift toward new immigrant destinations Contributors Mark Leach and Frank Bean examine the growing demand for low wage labor and lower housing costs that have attracted many immigrants to move beyond the larger cities Katharine Donato Charles Tolbert Alfred Nucci and Yukio Kawano report that the majority of Mexican immigrants are no longer single male workers but entire families who are settling in small towns and creating a surge among some rural populations long in decline Katherine Fennelly shows how opinions about the growing immigrant population in a small Minnesota town are divided along socioeconomic lines among the local inhabitants The town's leadership and professional elites focus on immigrant contributions to the economic development and the diversification of the community while working class residents fear new immigrants will bring crime and an increased tax burden to their communities Helen Marrow reports that many African Americans in the rural south object to Hispanic immigrants benefiting from affirmative action even though they have just arrived in the United States and never experienced historical discrimination As Douglas Massey argues in his conclusion many of the towns profiled in this volume are not equipped with the social and economic institutions to help assimilate new immigrants that are available in the traditional immigrant gateways of New York Los Angeles and Chicago And the continual replenishment of the flow of immigrants may adversely affect the nation's perception of how today's newcomers are assimilating relative to previous waves of immigrants New Faces in New Places illustrates the many ways that communities across the nation are reacting to the arrival of immigrant newcomers and suggests that patterns and processes of assimilation in the twenty first century may be quite different from those of the past Enriched by perspectives from sociology anthropology and geography New Faces in New Places is essential reading for scholars of immigration and all those interested in learning the facts about new faces in new places in America
