

Sheehan's Twelve Laws of Real Estate

#1: Selling and buying real property is a very touchy business.

#2: Academics publish or perish; Realtors sell or perish.

#3: The seller may propose, but it is the buyer who disposes.

#4: At the beginning, in the middle, and at the end, it's always about price.

#5: To get paid what you're worth, insist on getting paid what you're worth.

#6: To stay out of legal trouble, learn the facts, and disclose them.

#7: The first offer is the best offer.

#8: It's not over until it's over.

#9: Time is of the essence.

#10: If a party to a transaction doesn't understand the sales contract and something bad happens, watch out—especially if you're the agent working with the party that does understand it.

#11: "Never commoditize Realtors: there are the great, the good, the middling, the incompetent, and the disastrous."

#12: "Engage a Realtor with superior skills, because up to and including the settlement at which a property's legal transfer of ownership occurs, bizarre problems can surface."
