Not indexed Not illustrated 1915 edition Excerpt CHAPTER XXVII MEETING AGAIN Jerusalem fell on September 2d About six weeks after Pudens was once more in Rome the bearer of a despatch from Titus to his father the Emperor announcing his success and giving the details of the final assault and of the events which followed it He had reached Rome late at night too late to present himself at the palace He snatched a few hours of sleep at an inn which was conveniently near and proceeded to discharge his duty at the earliest possible hour next morning The day had scarcely dawned but the Emperor s ante chamber was already open and already contained two or three occupants Vespasian was a very early riser and Pudens who announced himself to the usher in waiting as the bearer of despatches from the army of the East was not kept waiting more than two or three minutes Admitted to the Imperial presence he met with a very warm greeting from his old chief the despatches were read and the information they contained had of course to be supplemented by a number of details which Pudens was able to supply The interview was naturally protracted to a very great length and when Pudens was at last dismissed not without a hearty assurance of future favour from the Emperor he found the ante chamber crowded with applicants who had been vainly waiting for an audience Their hopes were summarily dashed at least for the day by an announcement from the usher that the Emperor was too much occupied by a sudden pressure of business to see any other visitor that morning A groan of disappointment went up from the little crowd You have done us all an ill turn sir said a young man with a remarkably clever face and brilliant eyes shabbily dressed but evidently a gentleman But doubtless
