INTRODUCTION

The dependency school arose as a reaction to methropolitan or modernization school tendency to attribute all problems of underdevelopment to the periphery. Basically, there are two school of thought in Latin America and those here been classified structural and dependency theories. The structural focuses on the neo-classical analysis of development which do not favour them. This school was pre-dominant around the United Nation Economic Commission for Latin America (UNECLA).

However, another group came up and focus on the criticisms of the modernization school, apart of their intellectual heritage, apart of their intellectual heritage, were strands of the Marxist thought even though they were not classified as Marxist, they used his methodology and analysis.

Another factors that contributed to the Marxist school were Marxism and Russia revolutionaries, as well as continued intervention of USA into the socio-political activities of Latin America nations. The dependency school was pioneered by Raul Presbixh on agentive economist and the director of ECLA in the 1950s. The theory rejected the ideological postulations of the modernization school and argued that world economic is divided into developed, metropolitan cover and underdeveloped or Periphery.

Depravity from the conventional approach of the modernization school, early dependency theorist argued that Latin America was adversely affected by its trade relationship with the industrialized countries of the world production system made
