Stephen Kendrick, Paul Kendrick, 2004 The never before told story of the African American child who started the fight for desegregation in America's public schools In 1847 on windswept Beacon Hill in Boston a five year old girl named Sarah Roberts was forced to walk past five white schools to attend the poor and densely crowded black school Incensed that his daughter had been turned away at each white school her father Benjamin sued the city of Boston on her behalf He turned to twenty four year old Robert Morris the first black attorney ever to win a jury case in America Together with young Brahmin lawyer Charles Sumner this legal team forged a powerful argument against school desegregation that has reverberated down through American history in a direct legal line to Brown v Board of Education When the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled against Sarah Roberts Chief Justice Shaw created the concept of separate but equal an idea that affected every aspect of American life until it was overturned one hundred years later by Thurgood Marshall Today few have heard of the Roberts case or of the three thousand free blacks in Boston who fought valiantly and successfully long before the civil rights movement of the 1960s to integrate schools theaters and railway cars to legalize interracial marriage and to form the first black army regiment Now Stephen Kendrick and Paul Kendrick tell the inspiring story of the remarkable activist community of which Sarah and her family were a part bringing to light the human side of this crucial struggle Sarah's Long Walk recovers stories of black and white Boston of Beacon Hill in the nineteenth century and of all the concerned citizens both white and black who participated in the early struggles for equal rights The result is a rich historical tapestry a fascinating
