

A GUIDE FOR Caregivers of people with mental illness

Mental illness can affect not only the life of the person with the illness, but also their close family, partners and friends. Significant people in a person's life are often a source of support with the illness.

However, family, partners and friends may be faced with a loved one's mental illness without much information on ways to deal with it and its impact on their life.

If you are a family member, partner or friend who is 18 years or over and a primary source of support for a person with mental illness, this guide was designed for you. It involves information and suggestions about how you can help a person with mental illness who is 18 years or over (there are additional considerations when caring for children and adolescents) and ways to cope with the personal impact of the illness and to take care of yourself. The information in this guide is most suitable for people who are caring for someone who has a mental illness which is severe, chronic, treatment resistant or very recurrent.

The information and suggestions in this guide resulted from a study that combined the latest research with the opinions and consensus of international panels of caregivers, people with bipolar disorder, clinicians and researchers, all with experience and expertise in dealing with bipolar disorder. (Berk L, et al. Development of guidelines for caregivers of people with bipolar disorder: a Delphi expert consensus study. Bipolar Disorders 2011; 13: 556 - 70). The guidelines resulting from this study were analysed and the most general advice was used to create this general guide. If you are supporting a person with bipolar disorder, the more specific guidelines may be more appropriate for you. www.bipolarcaregivers.org

Not all of the information or suggestions may be relevant to you. Mental illness comes in many different forms. Caregiving experiences differ as well. Finding what works for you to deal with your situation can be a trial and error process.

This guide is NOT a replacement for medical advice and we strongly recommend that you or the person you care for discuss issues related to treatment with a clinician. Qualitative Examination of Family and Caregiver Experiences with Mental Health Treatment in Illinois Nicholas Mui,2023

Family members and caregivers of persons who experience mental disorders may themselves require support and treatment services to help them cope Mental health agencies in Illinois serve clients with mental illnesses but the extent to which they also provide services to and involve family members and caregivers in the treatment process is unclear Not much is known about the extent to which the mental health treatment system provides support including coping skills training and education to family members and caregivers of persons with mental illnesses The purpose of this study was to gather information regarding the support that caregivers of persons with mental illnesses had received from the treatment agencies In addition I solicited caregiver perspectives on their caregiving burden and their ability to become involved in their loved ones treatment process Data were gathered through a series of semi structured interviews with family members of persons with mental illnesses The interview data were then analyzed using an Interpretive Phenomenological Analysis approach Smith and Nizza 2022 The group experiential themes that arose revealed that some caregivers were able to access support from mental health agencies whereas others were not Some of those who were not able to access support from mental health agencies were able to access support from other sources such as family members friends and groups like the National Alliance on Mental Illness NAMI However there were some participants who did not have access to support and expressed significant emotional and financial burden Caregivers were also mixed in their reports of treatment involvement Some caregivers were able to be involved in treatment safety planning and medication management decisions for their loved ones Others were not allowed to be involved despite requests An unanticipated theme arose regarding academic accommodation for adolescents with mental illnesses and the difficulties caregivers had securing accommodations for their loved ones Another theme of the mental health treatment process arose when caregivers brought up the topic of how mental illnesses were managed in ER settings prior to psychiatric hospitalization The findings from this study suggest that caregivers have mixed experiences with being able to access support from either the mental health agencies or other sources In addition caregivers were not always allowed to be involved with their loved ones treatment even when their intentions were to assist their loved ones in achieving therapeutic goals I offer suggestions for improvements to mental health treatment processes and support that could benefit caregivers Helping Someone with Mental Illness Rosalynn Carter,Susan Golant, M.A.,2011-10-05 The first thing you need to know is that life isn't over The good news writes Mrs Carter in Helping Someone with Mental Illness is that with proper diagnosis and treatment the overwhelming majority of people with mental illness can now lead productive lives Based on Mrs Carter's twenty five years of advocacy and the latest data from the Rosalynn Carter Symposia for Mental Illness her book offers step by step information on what to do after the diagnosis seeking the best treatment evaluating health care providers
