E. Koroleva, 2012-12-06 Future development in the Arctic and Subarctic region requires careful attention to the possible consequences of the development activities themselves in relation to their environmental socioeconomic and cultural impacts. A more thorough understanding of the impact of future activities however demands the dissemination and confrontation of results from different regions and different scientific traditions. This requires scientific cooperation not only across disciplines but across border. Primarily it requires both consensus and innovations in regard to methods. This book confronts such differences in approaches and methods in relation to the analysis of socioeconomic and environmental consequences of large scale mineral and energy development activities in the Arctic and Subarctic establishing the common ground upon which future research activities can be based. Through a range of case studies including open cast mining, artisanal mining, logging, deforestation, oil extraction and industrial fishing, the contributors explore the challenges highlighted in global debates on sustainability, Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) and climate change. The case studies are used to assess whether and how development processes might compete and conflict with the market objectives of multinational corporations and the organizational and moral principles of indigenous communities. Emphasizing the perspectives of directly affected parties, the authors identify common patterns in the way in which extraction projects are conceptualized, implemented and perceived. The book provides a deeper understanding of the dynamics of the human environments where resource extraction takes place and its consequent impacts on local livelihoods. Its in depth case studies underscore the need for increased social accountability in the planning and development of natural resource extraction projects. Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act Amendments of 1987 United States.
