

Social Work Field Instruction Program: A Practice of Governance

YOLANDA G. EALDAMA

Faculty of Social Work, College of Social Work and Community Development
University of the Philippines, Philippines

Abstract: This paper discusses how a social work field instruction program enhances students' competence in governance and becomes a practice of governance.

Key words: social work field instruction, social work practice, good governance

INTRODUCTION

Social workers have been engaged in governance as state actors and public administrators, as members of the civil society and as personnel of business corporations' social responsibility mechanisms. However, few are the literature articulating social work in the context of governance. Likewise, the intersection of social work and public administration has been evident in many instances through the years that some writers considered social work as the sibling profession of public administration (Stivers in Rosenbloom, 2008). The relationship between public administration, governance and social work however, has yet to be articulated in the social work literature and in literature of public administration or governance. It is a fact that social work education itself, particularly the field instruction program has always been an engagement in governance.

This paper aims to show how social work as a profession has been involved in public administration and governance and how students have been trained through the field instruction program to be active participants in governance initiatives.

SOCIAL WORK AND GOVERNANCE

Governance is defined by the UNDP(UNDP 1997) as the "exercise of political, economic and administrative authority to manage a nation's affairs. It is the complex mechanisms, processes, relationships and institutions through which citizens and groups articulate their interests, exercise their rights and obligations and mediate their differences." The
