ABSTRACT

Published Online: July 07, 2025

Project-based Learning is an instructional method that emphasizes the purpose and meaning of communication through series of projects assigned. This study aimed to determine the perceptions of selected college students on the impact of Project-based Learning on their English oral communication skills particularly in the context of the Philippines. The study particularly employed the convergent mixed methods design to analyze the quantitative survey responses elicited from thirty-three (33) participants who were first year college students from a private institution in Manila, Philippines who at the time of data gathering, were taking a face-to-face English communication class. Out of the said participants, six (6) students were purposively invited for an online interview to generate qualitative data. Descriptive statistics and thematic analysis were used to make sense of the data gathered. The survey had four main segments with varied items on the connection between Pbl, and the enhancement of spoken communication skills; the interview focused on six (6) questions about the perceived impact of Pbl, on the development of English oral communication skills. The findings affirm that Project-based Learning is an effective technique in enhancing the English speaking skills of students. Both data sets emphasize that Pbl, does not only pave the way for linguistic development such as vocabulary growth, comprehension, and content knowledge, but also cultivates soft skills needed to accomplish English oral communication projects. The positive perceptions of respondents on the integration of Pbl in English communication emphasizes its roles in academic and personal enhancement, which strengthen the existing literature.

1.1. Background of the Study

In the constantly changing landscape of education, various effective teaching techniques for developing English oral communication skills are employed to respond to students' needs. These techniques are used to make students learn more about English communication. Some students deem that English speaking skill is complicated to learn. Students' difficulty in speaking is caused by various factors, including inappropriate teaching and learning methods (Widiyati & Pangesti, 2022), hence, it is a need that proper techniques are utilized in class to address the said issue. In the tertiary level, good English communication skills are essential. With this, learners are provided with multiple opportunities to hone their skills while they are studying in preparation for their future careers. English oral communication skill is important particularly in the workplace, that is why educational institutions come up with steps to train their students for the workforce (Sirisrimangkoem, 2021). The said skill is an essential part of everyday interaction and it fulfills a number of general and specific purposes. Being able to speak is certainly a life essential that individuals can take advantage of.

Communicative competence is one of the aims of the 21st century language teaching and learning (Eaton, 2010, as cited in Bakar et al., 2019). In the field of English language teaching, several strategies are employed by teachers to hone the communicative competence of learners. One of the techniques employed by educators is Project-based Learning (Pbl). Project-based Learning is a pedagogical framework that highlights that learning should be interactive, practical, and collaborative. It is a student-centered approach that allows students to experience situations based on real-world
