

What is the International System?

An abstract concept that encompasses global actors, the interactions (especially patterns of interaction) among those actors, and the factors that cause those interactions. The international system is the largest of a vast number of overlapping political systems that extend downward in size to micropolitical systems at the local level. (Rourke's glossary, p. xlv)

The notion of "system" suggest three meanings:

- ◆-There is an "organic interaction" among different parts, components and players of this system. (organic means that every component affects and gets affected by other units.)
- ◆-It would suggest that these interactions are not fully random and unpredictable. Rather, there are general patterns of behavior in human life, groups and even nations.
- ◆-The "international system," moreover, assumes that the distribution of the power within the system determines (and in some cases dictates) the behavior of different actors.

Property And The Making Of The International System:

"Property" and the Making of the International System Kurt Burch, 1998-01 This work considers the emergence of the modern international system the global social context framing the diverse behaviours in international relations in terms of the concepts of property and property rights It is argued that property is a crucial concept in socially shared understandings

Critical Perspectives on World Politics. "Property" and the Making of the International System Kurt Burch, 2023 This original work considers the emergence of the modern international system that is the global social context framing the diverse behaviors called international relations in terms of the concepts of property and property rights Burch argues that the development of property is a crucial aspect of contemporary claims about the modern state sovereignty international law state conflict global political economy and the world system as a whole By investigating a concept rather than a specific social condition activity or actor he explores the socially shared understandings and meanings that inform individuals outlooks and behaviors It is these changing meanings and consequent behaviors he demonstrates that actually make the international system

Living at the Borderlines Cynthia Barrow-Giles, Don D. Marshall, 2003 The idea that the Caribbean could be devolving downward in wealth function and sovereignty has become a recurrent theme in both academic and popular literature By focusing on some of the current issues facing Caribbean nation states the editors and contributors to this volume hope to inform and contribute to the ongoing debate on the broad themes of Sovereignty and Development and the prospects for survival of Caribbean nation states in a globalised world While some of the papers seek to describe and analyse the range and complexity of the challenge to national sovereignty and public policy autonomy others focus on issues relating to small country size gender and ethnic tensions security constitutional reform and regional integration The result is a balanced perspective the contributors do not gloss over the problem faced by the region At the same time they do not present a hyper pessimistic picture of Caribbean development prospects What gives the collection a particular dynamism is the way in which the authors have challenged the terrain of political possibilities traditionally defined for small peripheral societies

The Closure of the International System Lora Anne Viola, 2020-07-09 As global governance appears to become more inclusive and democratic many scholars argue that international institutions act as motors of expansion and democratization The Closure of the International System challenges this view arguing that the history of the international system is a series of institutional closures in which institutions such as diplomacy international law and international organizations make rules to legitimate the inclusion of some actors and the exclusion of others While international institutions facilitate collective action and common goods Viola's closure thesis demonstrates how these gains are achieved by limiting access to rights and resources creating a stratified system of political equals and unequals The coexistence of equality and hierarchy is a constitutive feature of the international system and its institutions This tension is relevant today as multilateral institutions are challenged by disaffected citizens non Western powers and established great powers discontent with the distribution of political rights and authority
